

CONTENTS

1	Introduction	page	1
2	Mechanisms for language acquisition		7
2.1	Chomsky's views on language acquisition		7
2.2	Competence and creativity		11
2.3	Primary linguistic data		15
2.4	Language in chimpanzees		17
2.5	Biological factors in language acquisition		23
2.6	Learning and learning theory		28
3	Language in the developing child		37
3.1	Egocentric speech		39
3.2	Piaget's views on language		42
3.2.1	Piaget as an epistemologist		42
3.2.2	Child's expressive language		44
3.2.3	Child's understanding of language		44
3.2.4	Universals and language variation		47
3.2.5	Development of the concept		48
3.2.6	Summary		50
3.3	The cognition hypothesis		51
3.4	Functional origins of language		57
4	Development of the child's sound system		62
4.1	Vocal productions and discriminations in infancy		62
4.2	Early perception and production of phonemic distinctions		68
4.3	Awareness of phonological structure		75
5	Naturalistic studies of language acquisition		78
5.1	Comprehension and production in child language		80
5.2	The development of word meaning		85

Contents

5.3	Holophrases	page	90
→5.4	Writing grammars for child language		93
5.5	Semantic relations in two-word utterances		99
5.6	Over the threshold		102
5.6.1	The development of negation		106
5.6.2	The development of questions		107
6	Experimental studies of linguistic development		110
6.1	Active and passive sentences		114
6.2	'John is easy to see'		121
6.3	Word order in other constructions		124
6.4	Relational terms		128
6.4.1	Dimensional adjectives		129
6.4.2	'More' and 'less'		131
6.4.3	'Same' and 'different'		135
6.4.4	Locative prepositions		138
6.5	Deixis and reference		140
7	The communicative context of language acquisition		149
7.1	Mothers' speech to children		149
7.2	Language and social class		163
7.3	Contextual variation in child speech		168
7.4	Learning more than one language		173
	References		176
	Index		191