

Contents

1. Can our present language training methods be improved on?
Views on the future 9
2. The balance between accuracy and fluency. The communicative approach. The concepts of language functions and notions. New technologies and basic needs 15
3. Microcomputers in language learning: Grammar, vocabulary, spelling, pronunciation, authoring systems 20
4. Viewdata (Videotext). The use of large databases 43
5. Teletext. Teleflashes 62
6. Making your own video programme. The functional approach. Videodiscs 74
7. Role-playing, simulation, drama, combinatory acquisition 85
8. Artificial intelligence. Synthetic speech. Robots 92
9. The use of authentic material. TV, film, video, radio, satellites 101
10. The use of telephone exercises. Teleconferencing. Satellite communication 118
11. Language testing. Distance testing. Self-testing 126
12. Distance education. The future of self-education. Continuing education 141
13. A new super-media model of language learning. Flexible combinations of different media (media-mix) 148

14. Summing up 155

Appendix

An authoring system for grammar exercises 159

List of useful terminology 167

Bibliography 171

Index 185