

CONTENTS

Preface	IX
Keith Cameron
CHAPTER I : Can Computers Aid Vocabulary Learning?	1
Jeremy Fox
1. Introduction	1
2. Definition of Terms	2
3. Some Principles of Vocabulary Acquisition with Computers	4
4. Some Implications for CAL Vocabulary Software Design	8
5. Conclusion	12
CHAPTER II : Small Programs that 'Know' What They Teach	14
Derrick Ferney
1. Introduction	14
2. Teaching Programs	15
3. 'Canned Knowledge'	16
4. A Knowledge Based Program	18
5. GENDER MENDER	20
6. Recapitulation	24
Appendix	25
CHAPTER III : Design Considerations in Writing CALL Software with Particular Reference to Extended Materials	28
David Clarke
1. General Background	28
2. Programming and Publishing	29
3. Orientation within the Programme	30
4. Layout and the Use of Colour	31

VI Computer Assisted Language Learning

5. Authoring	33
6. The Limits to Authoring	35
7. Conclusion	37

CHAPTER IV : Designer Labyrinths : Text Mazes for Language Learners . 38

Osman Durrani

1. The Didactic Text Maze	38
2. The Computerized Text Adventure	40
3. Classroom Applications	43

CHAPTER V : Aspects of Text Storage and Text Compression in CALL . 49

Laurence Wright

1. Introduction	49
2. Text Storage in BASIC	49
3. Text Storage other than in BASIC Strings	54
4. Text Compression	55
5. Conclusions	65
Appendix	65

CHAPTER VI : AI : 'Grandeur' or 'Servitude'? . 67

Brian Farrington

1. The End of a Phase for CALL	67
2. Intelligent CALL	68
3. Inadequacies of Present Intelligent Systems	71
4. Possible Ways Forward	75

CHAPTER VII : Towards an Intelligent Syntax Checker . 81

J.E. Galletly and C.W. Butcher, with J. Lim How

1. The Next Generation : What future for CALL?	81
--	----

2. Choice of Programming Language	85
3. A Brief Introduction to PROLOG	87
4. The Project	92
5. General Requirements of a CALL System	93
6. Area of Investigation	93
7. Further Details of Impementation	98
8. Conclusion	99
CHAPTER VIII : Language Tutoring with PROLOG	101
Masoud Yazdani
1. Introduction	101
2. Syntactic Structures	103
3. A Simple Tutoring System	107
4. The Basic Architecture	108
5. Future Plans	110
Index	113