

Contents

INTRODUCTION	Page 1
SECTION 1: NEW TECHNOLOGY FOR LINGUISTS	Page 4
Computer applications to language. Computer Assisted Learning. Computer Assisted Language Learning - the mainframe versus the micro.
SECTION 2: APPROACHES TO CALL	Page 13
Approaches to Computer Assisted Language Learning. Traditional gap-fillers, multiple-choice tests and free-format question-answer dialogues. Input validation - a check-list. Generative programs, simulations, adventures and word games. Cloze and text reconstruction. Translation and free composition. Audio-enhanced CALL. Presentation strategies. Use of animation, graphics and colour. Expert systems and artificial intelligence. Integrating CALL into a teaching programme. Interactive video.
SECTION 3: COMPUTERS IN ENGLISH LANGUAGE TEACHING	Page 43
By John Higgins, The British Council. Approaches to CALL in teaching English as a Foreign Language. Part One: non-dedicated, Part Two: dedicated software.
SECTION 4: READY-MADE CALL SOFTWARE, AUTHORING PACKAGES AND AUTHOR LANGUAGES	Page 55
Off-the-peg packages. Doing-it-yourself with a range of different authoring packages. Author languages: PILOT and MICROTXT.
SECTION 5: BASIC	Page 76
Programming in BASIC. The case for using BASIC. What the linguist needs to know about BASIC.
SECTION 6: SELECTING HARDWARE	Page 84
Advice on the selection of hardware.
BIBLIOGRAPHY	Page 95
Recommended reading and regular journals/magazines.
IG22	iii
	CONTENTS

SOFTWARE INDEX

Page 109

A list of all the programs mentioned in the text, and other CALL programs currently available commercially and from educational research teams.

USEFUL ADDRESSES

Page 140

Publishers and other producers of CALL software. Sources of information.

GLOSSARY

Page 145

All the jargon you will ever need to know.