

Contents

	List of tables	page xi
	List of figures	xiv
	Preface	xv
	List of abbreviations	xvii
1	Introduction	1
	Theoretical perspectives on categorisation	3
	The perspective taken in this book	5
	Disclaimers	7
	The organisation of this book	8
	GRAMMAR
2	Functional categories and language typology	13
	Structuralism: Sapir and Jakobson	14
	The notional classification of functional categories	15
	Expanding the range of functional categories in language description	16
	Towards a new classification	20
	Conclusions	25
3	Lexical, morphological, and phonological dimensions of functional categories	26
	Lexical realisation	26
	A case study: Quechua	29
	Other criteria	32
	Primitives at the interface	39
	Clitics	40
	Conclusions	41
4	Semantics and pragmatics	42
	Semantic features of functional categories	42
	The syntax/semantics interface and the interpretability of features	46
		vii

	Deletability and expression as a null form	47
	The special status of discourse markers	48
	Interjections	51
	Conclusions	52
5	Theoretical syntax: the generative tradition	53
	Historical overview	54
	Theoretical considerations	58
	Diagnostic criteria	61
	The category P	65
	Conclusions	70
HISTORICAL LINGUISTICS
6	Grammaticalisation	73
	Different dimensions of the grammaticalisation process	76
	Frequently emerging functional categories	77
	Grammaticalisation theory and generative models of functional categories	83
	Conclusions	86
7	Linguistic reconstruction	88
	Functional categories in Indo-European	90
	The evidence from Proto-Uralic	91
	The evidence from Afro-Asiatic	93
	The evidence from Amerind	95
	Conclusions	96
PSYCHOLINGUISTICS
8	Speech production	99
	Production models: evidence from speech error studies	100
	Garrett's distinction between functional and positional structure	105
	Frequency effects	106
	Evidence from neurolinguistic studies	108
	Conclusions	110
9	Language development	111
	First language development	111
	Child bilingual development	116
	Second language development	119
	Conclusions	125

10	Agrammatic aphasia and Specific Language Impairment	127
	Agrammatism	127
	Case marking and adpositions in agrammatic speech	133
	Structural interpretations of agrammatic speech	138
	Specific Language Impairment	139
	Conclusions	142
11	Language attrition and death	143
	The study of attrition	143
	Gaelic in Scotland	146
	Dyirbal in north-eastern Australia	147
	Hungarian in the United States	148
	German in London	150
	Low German in western Siberia	150
	Conclusions	151
LANGUAGE CONTACT AND BILINGUAL SPEECH
12	Sign languages	155
	The study of sign languages	155
	Mouthing	156
	Grammaticalisation	156
	Reference tracking and agreement	159
	Classifiers	161
	Conclusions	162
13	Code-switching and code-mixing	163
	The basic phenomenon	163
	The wider phenomenon	165
	Language distance and equivalence	167
	Problem areas	168
	The proper definition of functional categories	172
	Conclusions	176
14	Lexical borrowing	177
	Spanish borrowings in Bolivian Quechua	178
	Romance borrowings in Maltese Arabic	183
	Conclusions	187
15	Pidgin and creole genesis	188
	Pidgins and creoles	189
	Tok Pisin	193

	Saramaccan	198
	Negerhollands	201
	Creole lexical and functional categories	205
	Conclusions	209
16	Mixed languages	211
	Issues of definition and delimitation	211
	Classical mixed languages: Media Lengua	213
	Split languages: Michif	219
	Reverse split type	222
	Reverse type: Spanish Romani or Caló	224
	Functional categories and relexification	225
	Conclusions	226
17	Foreigner Talk	227
	Simple codes	229
	The study of Foreigner Talk	230
	Maxims, strategies, and models for Foreigner Talk	234
	Conclusions	237
	CONCLUSIONS
18	Conclusions: towards a modular and multi-dimensional perspective	238
	Main findings from grammar	240
	Main findings from historical linguistics	241
	Main findings from psycholinguistics	241
	Main findings from language contact studies	242
	A differentiated perspective on functional categories	244
	Functional categories from an evolutionary perspective	245
	Prospects	253
	References	255
	Author index	278
	Subject index	284
	Language index	294