

Acknowledgments	xi
Translator's Note	xii
Introduction	xiii

PART ONE. DERRIDA, READER OF HUSSERL: GENESIS AND
THE TRANSCENDENTAL SENSE OF DEATH

I.1. Eidos and Time	I
1. The Problem of Genesis: Time and Truth 3—2. Being has Always Already Begun: Phenomenological, Ontological, and Empirical Geneses 8—3. Transcendental Teleology and its Empirical Crisis: The Eidos of Europe 19
I.2. The Absolute is Passage	27
1. Reactivating the Origin: Return Inquiry 28—2. Truth Lives Only by Surviving 33—3. Writing and the Transcendental Sense of Death 35—4. The Crisis of History: Fact, Eidos, and Fault 39
I.3. Forgetting and Memory (of Ideality)	45
1. Difference Dwells in Language Alone 50—2. Memory and Forgetting of Ideality 55—3. Epochè and Solitary Discourse of the Soul 62—4. Originary Intuition and Signification 65—5. Duration of the Augenblick: The World in Time 69—6. Widersinnigkeit and Sinnlosigkeit: Ideality of Bedeutung and Non-Intuition 77

PART TWO. DERRIDA BEFORE HEIDEGGER: FINITUDE IS INFINITE

2.1. Being is not Gathered

87

1. On the Epoch of Representation 87—2. Sendings [Des envois] 96—3. The Paradox of the Origin in Heidegger 109

2.2. Whence the Future?

114

1. Originary Temporality and Originary Historicity 114—
2. Genesis and Origin of Time 123

2.3. Dasein's Life

142

1. Dasein Does Not Pass Away 143—2. Is My Death Possible? 154

Conclusions

177

Notes

199

Works Cited

251