

Contents

I	Introduction	11
1	The Derridean Interpretation and the Phenomenological Reduction.....	11
2	The Husserl-Heidegger Debate: “Context”, “History”, and “Truth” as Problems of Interpretation	16
3	Derrida on Husserl and Speech Act Theory: The Earlier and Later Husserl, and the Problem of the Intention of the Author	21
4	The Institution of Literature, Literature as a Place for Fundamental Revealing, and Kafka’s “Law”	26
5	Deconstruction and Phenomenological Reduction in Derrida Studies, Further Primary Sources, and a Remark on the Term “Interpretation”	34
II	Struggling with the Dominance of the Tradition for the “Things Themselves”: Husserl and Heidegger on the Phenomenological Reduction	43
1	Husserl’s Idea of Phenomenology	43
1.1	The Problem of the Possibility of Knowledge: From the Natural to the Phenomenological Attitude	45
1.2	The Meanings of Being, and the Equivocity of the Pair Immanence/Transcendence: Through the Reduction to the Phenomenological Seeing	50
1.3	The Eidetic Reduction, Universal Objects, and Intentionality	59
1.4	Constitution and the Possibility of Knowledge.....	65
2	Heidegger and the Phenomenological Reduction.....	74

2.1	Three Insights of Husserl: Intentionality, Categorical Intuition, and the Original Sense of the Apriori	76
2.2	Neglecting the Question of Being: Traditional Presuppositions in Husserl	88
2.3	The Husserlian Ground of Heidegger's Fundamental Ontology	98
III	Derrida on the Phenomenological Reduction and Husserl's Two Signs	119
1	The Indicative Allusion (Hinweis) vs. the Apodictic Demonstration (Beweis): Inadequacy and the Thing as a Sign for Itself	123
2	The Threat of Ubiquitous Inadequacy: The Intervention of Indication	135
3	The "Entanglement" of the Two Signs, and "Solitary Mental Life" as the Place of the Pure Expressive Sign	141
4	Type/Token Distinction, and Imaginary Representation.....	150
5	The Risk of Infinite Regress: The Necessity of the Immanent/Real-Object -Distinction, and the Problem of Representation	157
6	Psychological and Transcendental Phenomenology, and Iteration	169
IV	The Method of Free Variation and the Problem of Induction	183
1	The Primordial Unity of Sense and Fact	187
2	The Problem of Induction	200
3	The Idea in the Kantian Sense and the Anarchy of the Noema	211
4	The Challenge of Hume.....	225
5	Two Ways of Eliminating the Primordiality of the Sign: From the Philosophy of Intuition towards the Trace	230
V	Temporality: Ego and the Idea in the Kantian Sense	241
1	The Flow of Consciousness and the Necessity of Signs	242
2	Ego as an Idea in the Kantian Sense: Differance and the Philosophy of Life	256
3	Phonocentrism, Supplementarity, and Archi-Writing	264

4	The Meaning/Object Distinction, and the Death of the Writer	272
5	True and Spurious Infinity	290
VI	The Intention of the Author and the Question of Context:
	The Encounter with Speech Act Theory	303
1	The Question of Writing: Writing as “a Means of Communication”, Saussure, and Experience as Writing	305
2	Performative Acts as Radically Constitutive	326
3	Non-governable Context and General Iterability: Challenging Austin’s Teleology and the Notion of “Citation”	335
4	The Author(s) as the First Reader(s): The Act and Event as Syntheses, and “Societies” within a Speech Act	349
VII	The Question of History, and Deconstruction as a Sort of Phenomenological Reduction.....	365
1	Genetic Phenomenology: Passive and Active Synthesis, and the “Life-World” as the Ground for Science.....	365
2	Theoretical Attitude: Objectivism vs. Transcendental Philosophy, and the Inquiry Back	381
3	The Hierarchy of Objectivities: Real and Ideal Objects, Free and Bound Ideal Objects, and “the Paradox of the Phenomenological Statement ”	390
4	Reactivating Sense-Sedimentations	403
5	“The Origin of the World”: Humean Scepticism, Kant’s “Intraworldliness” and Lack of Method, and “the Question ‘of Man’”	412
6	Between Empiricism and Rationalism: Husserl’s Solution to the Crises of Metaphysics and Positivism – “Internal history” and Free Variation	420
7	Disregarding Historicity: The Invariants and “Outside” of History	440
8	Operative and Thematic Concepts: Deconstruction as a Sort of Phenomenological Reduction	447
9	Heidegger as a Judeo-Christian Thinker	454
10	The Endless Dialogue between Husserl and Heidegger as the “Place” of Deconstruction: “A New, Very New Enlightenment” and “Literature”	470

VIII	Kafka, "Ultra-Critical" Literature, and the Exemplary Literary Mark: The Undecidable, and Law and Justice in Derrida and Kafka's "In the Penal Colony"	485
1	Law and Justice: An Unjust Legal Judgment in "In the Penal Colony", Wittgensteinian Rule, and the Undecidable	493
2	The Deconstruction of a Univocal Signpost	504
3	The Contaminatedness of Justice: The Necessity of Politics – Sacrificing the Officer	517
4	"Deconstruction is Justice"	526
5	Wittgenstein's Word "Interpretation" ("Deutung").....	535
6	The Institution of Literature: The Unlimited Possibility to Ask any Question and the Exemplary Trace	542
7	The Encounter with Heidegger's "The Origin of the Work of Art": The Truth as Unconcealment, and the Oblivion of the Mark	549
8	The Transcendental Reduction as a Condition of Literature: Truth, Arts of Letters, and Thematic Criticism	559
9	Ultra-Critical Literature: Questioning Philosophy, Literary Features and Conventions, and Other Established Beliefs	572
10	The Politics of Interpretation	582
	Conclusion	591
	Epilogue: Enduring and Disregarding the Gift: Between Phenomenology and Literature	599
	Bibliography	619
	Index of Names	647