

Table of Contents

Title	i
Zusammenfassung	iii
Table of Contents	v
Preface & Acknowledgments	ix
List of Abbreviations	xi

PART I

THE CHALLENGE OF TEACHING ENGLISH IN INDONESIAN'S MUHAMMADIYAH UNIVERSITIES (1958-2005) 1

Chapter I

Introduction 3

Who Reads the Canon? 3

How to read the canon? 5

What to Read? 7

The English Language as a Melting Pot 11

The Teaching of English as Second and Foreign Language 15

Situating the Indonesian Curriculum 22

Situating the Muhammadiyah Curriculum 24

Research Questions and Methodology 25

Chapters Charted 28

Chapter II

The Socio-political factors of the emergence of teaching English in postcolonial Indonesia 33

Introduction 33

Bahasa Indonesia as the contesting melting pot: The interplay of Sanskrit with Hinduism and Arabic with Islam 34

European foreign languages (1602-1942): The Dutch's disengagement with the education for the indigenous Indonesia 37

The dawn of the English Language Teaching (ELT) & the role of America in the new Indonesia (1942-1965) 42

Suharto regime: English Language Teaching (ELT) gaining its stronghold (1965-1998) 52

The Brief sketch of the development of National English Syllabus 60

Conclusion 62

Chapter III

English as a means of Dakwah: A survey on the history of English Departments in the Indonesian Muhammadiyah Universities (1958-2005) 67

Introduction 67

Madrasa as the encounter from traditionalists 69

Madrasa and the encounter with modernity 70

Muhammadiyah establishing modern Islamic schools & universities (1912-2005) 72

History of the English Departments in Muhammadiyah Universities (1958-2005) 78

English Department, Univ. Muhammadiyah Prof Dr Hamka (1958) 81

English Department, Univ. Muhammadiyah Surakarta (1984) 82

English Department, Univ. Muhammadiyah Ahmad Dahlan (1984) 83

English Department, Univ. Muhammadiyah Malang (1987) 83

English Department, Univ. Muhammadiyah Mataram (1992) 84

English Department, Univ. Muhammadiyah Makasar (1993) 84

English Department, Univ. Muhammadiyah Sukabumi (2003) 85

English as a means of Dakwah 86

Conclusion: the limit of Islamic education 87

PART II

MAINSTREAMING GENDER THROUGH POSTCOLONIAL MUSLIM WOMEN WRITERS 91

Chapter IV

Muhammadiyah students quest for Islamic identity: The call for universal brotherhood (Ummah) and the return to total Islam (Kaffah) 93

Introduction 93

Contextualizing new-Islamism in Indonesia: propagating Islam kaffah and ummah 96

Situating literary resistance: the emergence of new-Islamist literature 101

Jaring-Jaring Merah (The Red Net) 104

Maut di Kamp Loka (the Death at Camp Loka) 107

Hingga Batu Bicara (Until the Stones Speak) 109

The Ideal Norm, Darul Ummah 111

Chapter V

The unquestioned gender lens in the contemporary Indonesian Sharia-Ordinances: female students “should” wear the headveil 115

Introduction 115

Democracy, yes. Gender, not yet 116

Situating women’s resistance 120

Theological Pretext 130

Political Subtext of Androcentric Reading 132

Under the Rite of Morality 136

Captives of the State 138

Jilbab as State’s Control against Women’s Bodies 140

Mainstreaming Gender 143

Chapter VI

Muhammadiyah at the crossroad: between sacred text and pragmatism 145

Introduction: interviews charted 145

Between ideology and pragmatism: establishment of English Departments 146

Studies on Islam and Muhammadiyah: transforming the cognitive to the affective 151

“The current Western canon” is still sacred 155

Clash of values, the bridge is needed 161

Conclusion: tension in Islamic curriculum reformation 166

Chapter VII

Mainstreaming gender through postcolonial Muslim women writers 173

Introduction 173

The Islamic cosmology of Muhammadiyah students: religious setting in connection with the choice of literary text 174

Theoretical approach: multicultural education 176

Post-structuralist critical pedagogies: untangling gender inequality 178

Procedure in critical inquiry: classroom practice 180

Why postcolonial Muslim women writers? 182

Why Cornelia Sorabji? 185

Why Nawal el-Saadawi? 194

Why Leila Ahmed?	196
Why Fatema Memissi?	197
Why Kartini?	199
Using postcolonial Muslim women writers' works in Prose syllabus: discussion related to gender theme	200
Conclusion	203

Chapter VIII

Conclusion 205

Muslim students need a specific literary canon	205
The limit of Islamic education and its consequences	205
Muhammadiyah curriculum reformation	207
Mainstreaming gender through postcolonial Muslim women writers	209

Glossary	211
Bibliography	215
Index	235