

CONTENTS

List of Figures	7
Acknowledgements and Picture Credits	8
Foreword	9
1 Partners in Adult Learning	Page 11
A story of struggle – Complex relationships – International connections – Aspects of social history.
2 The Pioneering Twenties	21
The British Broadcasting Company – Appointment of John Reith – Early commitment to the educational value of broadcasting – Reith's philosophy in theory and practice – The social context of early broadcasting – Developments in organisation – The first systematic provision of broadcast adult education – From Company to Corporation – Interest expressed by organised adult education – The Hadow Committee on Adult Education and Broadcasting – Action taken on New Ventures in Broadcasting – The response of adult learners – Programme choice – The social context of the later 1920s.
3 The Thoughtful Thirties	53
Wireless discussion groups – The serious listening public – Factors in the growth of serious listening – The birth of television – Overseas broadcasting – The Ullswater Committee – Response in adult interests – First year of war.
4 The Far-reaching Forties	80
Listening through the blitz – The Overseas Forces' and World audience – Occupied Europe – Adult education for the Services – Changes at the top – Years of reconstruction – The BBC after the war – The return of television – The Beveridge Committee – The Further Education Experiment.
5 The Searching Fifties	116
Developments in television, 1951–5 – The coming of commercial television – Developments in radio, 1951–5 – Further education, 1951–5 – The watershed years – Competition in television, 1956–60 – Television group viewing and media studies – Developments in radio, 1956–60 – Further education, 1956–60 – Researches of William Belson and Joseph Trenaman – The Pilkington Committee.

6	The Expanding Sixties	143
Greene, ffordre and Normanbrook – The third television channel – Other recommendations of the Pilkington Report – Further education moves into television – Further education radio, 1961–5 – Joint operations in enquiry, advice and promotion of use – The educational closed-circuit boom – University of the Air and alternative strategies – Vocational and parental education – Language courses and creative leisure – The first local radio stations – Broadcasting and the world – Outstanding programmes in the general output – Open University.
<hr/>
7	The Diversifying Seventies	180
The raising of the school-leaving age – The Russell and Alexander Reports – Charles Curran and the new commitment – Living decisions, rights and responsibilities – Industrial relations and trade union studies – Adult literacy and numeracy – Family and health education – The Open University diversifies – The Annan Committee and the fourth television channel – More language courses for adults – More international connections – Major projects in general programmes – Volunteers and community service – Strategies reconsidered in continuing education – Ethnic minorities – Physically and mentally handicapped – Young adult community – Community of the third age.
<hr/>
8	The Everything-is-possible Eighties	229
Problems of copyright – Freedom of time – Freedom of place – Freedom of choice – Freedom of action – The future of broadcasting – The future of the partnership.
<hr/>
	Bibliography	249
<hr/>
	Index	251
<hr/>		