Part I The Industry in Global Context

1 The Role of Cotton as a World Power, 1780–1990	3
DOUGLAS A. FARNIE AND DAVID J. JEREMY
2 The Role of Merchants as Prime Movers in the Expansion of the Cotton Industry, 1760–1990	15
DOUGLAS A. FARNIE
2.1 The challenge posed by a global approach to the history of the cotton industry	15
2.2 The main trends in development, 1790–1990	16
2.3 The challenge posed by a marketing approach to the history of the cotton industry	26
2.4 The role of Manchester merchants	29
2.5 The achievement of the trading companies of Japan	39
2.6 The transformation of mercantile activity in Manchester under the pressure of foreign competition, 1872–1960	41
2.7 The achievement of the tiger economies of East Asia in creating a world market in clothing, 1950–1990	48
2.8 The development of marketing techniques in America	49
2.9 Conclusion	54
3 The Lancashire Cotton Industry, the Royal Navy, and the British Empire, c.1700–1960	57
JOHN SINGLETON
3.1 Introduction	57

3.2	Imperial expansion and industrial revolution	59
3.3	The Victorian high tide	63
3.4	Economic and naval challenge	69
3.5	The final phase	79
3.6	Conclusion	82
4	The International Diffusion of Cotton Manufacturing Technology, 1750–1990s	85
	DAVID J. JEREMY
4.1	Introduction	85
4.2	The recent context	85
4.3	Diffusion by means of printed information	88
4.4	Diffusion by skilled artisans	94
4.5	Diffusion by means of industrial exhibitions	99
4.6	State-sponsored technology acquisition	108
4.7	Multinational corporations as agents of cotton technology transfer	113
4.8	Technological systems builders : merchants, machine makers, and consultants as agents of cotton technology transfer	118
4.9	The effects of the diffusion of cotton manufacturing technology in the global cotton industry	125
4.10	Conclusion	125
5	Technological Evolution in Cotton Spinning, 1878–1933	129
	GARY SAXONHOUSE AND GAVIN WRIGHT
5.1	Introduction	129
5.2	The transoceanic migrations of continuous and intermittent spinning	133
5.3	The textile machinery industry	137
5.4	Hypotheses and evidence	139
5.5	New evidence: machine size and machine speed	142
5.6	Dividing and conquering the markets: trends in yarn count	147
5.7	Conclusion	151
6	International Changes in Cotton-Manufacturing Productivity, 1830–1950s	153
	DAVID J. JEREMY
6.1	Introduction	153
6.2	Technology transfer, invention, and productivity	154

6.3	International changes in cotton manufacturing productivity	159
6.4	Conclusion	189
7	Organization and Management in the Global Cotton Industry, 1800s–1990s	191
	DAVID J. JEREMY
7.1	Introduction	191
7.2	The historiography of the organization of the Lancashire cotton industry	191
7.3	Firms, markets, and culture in the global cotton industry, 1890–1990s	198
7.4	Management in cotton manufacturing, 1830s–1990s	227
7.5	Conclusion	245

Part II The Industry in Europe and the USA

8	Technology Transfer to the Catalan Cotton Industry: From Calico Printing to the Self-Acting Mule	249
	J. K. J. THOMSON
8.1	Introduction	249
8.2	Technological change related to calico printing	253
8.2.1	Why calico printing?	253
8.2.2	The introduction of mordant and madder printing techniques to Spain	254
8.2.3	Indigo printing	256
8.2.4	Copper-plate printing	258
8.2.5	Cylinder printing and the ‘perrotine’	259
8.3	Spinning	262
8.4	New sources of energy: water power and steam power	270
8.5	Conclusion	275
9	The Birth of the Dutch Cotton Industry, 1830–1840	283
	ALFONS VAN DER KRAAN
9.1	Introduction	283
9.2	An assisted birth	287
9.3	Conclusion	304

10	It Could Have Been Worse: The West German Cotton Industry, 1945–1990	307
	STEPHAN H. LINDNER
10.1	Introduction	307
10.2	The textile industry and its cotton branches: an overview	309
10.3	Stagnation in a booming economy	309
10.4	Decline in a still prosperous economy	324
10.5	Conclusion	334
11	The Russian Technical Society and British Textile Machinery Imports	337
	STUART THOMPSTONE
11.1	Technology transfer in theory and practice	337
11.2	Steam engine and boiler technology and transmission systems	349
11.3	British-influenced factory design	352
11.4	Finishing equipment	353
11.5	Raw materials supplies	354
11.6	Spinning technology	355
11.7	Cotton weaving technology	356
11.8	Factory management	358
11.9	Social factors	362
11.10	Conclusion	363
12	Path Dependence and the Origins of Cotton Textile Manufacturing in New England	365
	JOSHUA L. ROSENBLUM
12.1	Introduction	365
12.2	The early development of the American textile industry	370
12.3	The origins of the Massachusetts system	375
12.4	Tariff protection and path dependence	380
12.5	Conclusion	390

Part III The Industry in Asia

13	The Role of Cotton Textiles in the Economic Development of India, 1600–1990	395
	DOUGLAS A. FARNIE
13.1	The transfer of textile designs from Europe by the East India Company	396
13.2	The revolution in the Anglo-Indian trade in textiles, 1779–1830	398
13.3	The establishment of the first spinning mill in Bombay	400
13.4	The three mill-building booms of 1872–1875, 1881–1884, and 1887–1893	405
13.5	The internal diffusion of the cotton industry from Bombay, 1861–1930	409
13.6	The forging of a machinery supply chain, 1870–1920	410
13.7	The penetration of Lancashire piece-goods into the Indian market	413
13.8	The survival and renaissance of the native hand-loom weavers	415
13.9	The achievements of Bombay in the supply of the markets of Asia, 1873–1905
13.10	The rebirth of India as a global exporter, 1937–1945	417
13.11	The comparative performance of Pakistan and Bangladesh as exporters, 1947–1990	419
13.11.1	Pakistan	420
13.11.2	Bangladesh	422
13.12	India's withdrawal from, and its re-entry into, world trade in textiles, 1966–1996	423
13.13	The triumph of the small-scale power-loom manufacturers, 1956–1996	425
13.14	Embedded constraints upon economic development	427
14	Rural Manufacture in China's Cotton Industry, 1890–1990	431
	LINDA GROVE
14.1	Introduction	431
14.2	The development of China's indigenous cotton industry	433
14.3	The nineteenth-century reorganization of the cotton industry	437

14.4	The move toward large production units, 1937–1978	446
14.5	Economic reform policies and China's cotton industry	450
14.6	Conclusion	459
15	Organizational Changes in the Japanese Cotton Industry during the Inter-War Period: From Inter-Firm-Based Organization to Cross-Sector-Based Organization	461
	TAKESHI ABE
15.1	Introduction	461
15.2	The background to the structural change	464
15.2.1	The inter-firm-based organization before the First World War	464
15.2.2	The major changes in industrial structure after the First World War	467
15.3	The establishment of cross-sector-based organization	474
15.3.1	Changes in the nature of traditional strategies	474
15.3.2	The development of downstream industry	477
15.4	The development of new strategies	483
15.4.1	The diffusion of automatic power-looms and its limit	484
15.4.2	The adoption of the high draft system and the production of fine yarn	490
15.4.3	The adoption of air-conditioning systems and improvements in the quality of yarn	492
15.5	Conclusion
16	The Development of Factory Management in Japan During the Early Stages of Industrialization: The Kanegafuchi Cotton-Spinning Company before the First World War	495
	TETSUYA KUWAHARA
16.1	Introduction	495
16.2	Acquisition of rivals and problems of variable product quality	500
16.2.1	Acquisition of rivals	500
16.2.2	Variable product quality	501
16.3	The factory as a technical system	504
16.3.1	The factory	504
16.3.2	The role of workers in the technical system	509
16.4	Standardization	510

16.4.1	Structural reform for direct control	510
16.4.2	Standardization	511
16.4.3	Skill training	513
16.5	Securing the cooperation of the workers	514
16.6	Conclusion	516
17	International Circumstances Surrounding the Post-War Japanese Cotton Textile Industry	521
	KAORU SUGIHARA
17.1	Introduction	521
17.2	Patterns of inter-Asian competition	525
17.3	The disintegration of the Commonwealth market	538
17.3.1	The first period	539
17.3.2	The second period	543
17.3.3	The third period	547
17.4	The impact of Asia's industrialization	551
 Part IV Concluding Perspectives
18	The Role of the Cotton Industry in Economic Development	557
	DOUGLAS A. FARNIE
18.1	The cotton industry and the economic development of the United Kingdom	558
18.2	The role of the subsidiary industries in creating a regional economy	560
18.3	The cotton industry and the economic development of Europe	566
18.4	The cotton industry and the economic development of America	571
18.5	The creative influence of the export trade in cotton yarn	574
18.6	The cotton industry and the economic development of Japan	577
18.7	The cotton industry and the economic development of China	581
