Introduction	1
CHAPTER 1
The morphological patterns of anticausatives and their interpretation	9
1.1 The causative alternation	9
1.2 The causative alternation in German	10
1.3 Theories about the derivational relation between causatives and anticausatives	11
1.4 Semantic effects of anticausative morphology	12
1.4.1 Anticausatives in Italian	13
1.4.2 Anticausatives in French	20
1.4.3 Anticausatives in Greek	24
1.4.4 Conclusion and outlook	28
1.4.5 Anticausatives in German	29
CHAPTER 2
The dative causer construction	41
2.1 Datives in the context of unmarked anticausatives and non-alternating unaccusative verbs	41
2.2 Datives in the context of marked anticausative verbs	45
2.3 The absence of the unintentional causer reading: Semantic blocking?	48
2.3.1 Do marked anticausatives involve external argument semantics?	53
2.3.2 Causer vs. causing event	57
2.3.2.1 Causative constructions without an external argument	59
2.3.2.1.1 The adversity causative in Japanese	59
2.3.2.1.2 The desiderative construction in Finnish	62
2.3.2.2 Is the dative causer blocked by a causative event?	63
2.3.3 Interim conclusion	66
2.4 Language comparison: Datives in anticausative structures	67

2.4.1	Introduction	67
2.4.2	The language survey	68

CHAPTER 3

	Datives and changes of state	73
3.1	Datives as specifiers of applicative heads	73
3.1.1	Low applicatives	75
3.1.2	Affected datives	78
3.1.3	Unintentional causer datives as high applicatives	81
3.2	Interim summary and some open questions	83
3.3	An alternative view on the unintentional dative causer	89
3.4	A typology of external arguments of causative events	95
3.5	Some crosslinguistic relatives of the dative causer	102
3.6	Conclusions: The syntax and semantics of the unintentional causer construction	108

CHAPTER 4

	The causative alternation	115
4.1	The core theory of (anti-)causatives	115
4.1.1	Problems for derivational analyses	119
4.1.1.1	Morphological marking	119
4.1.1.2	Verb restrictions and selection restrictions	121
4.1.1.3	PP-modification in passives and anticausatives	123
4.1.1.3.1	PP-modification in English	124
4.1.1.3.2	PP-modification in German	125
4.1.1.3.3	PP-modification in Greek	128
4.1.1.4	Crosslinguistic differences in verb restrictions and selection restrictions	131
4.1.1.5	Interim conclusion	132
4.1.2	On the event decomposition of (anti-)causatives	133
4.1.3	The syntax of (anti-)causatives	139
4.2	Comments on the categorization of Roots	145
4.3	Comments on the decomposition of (anti-)causatives	147
4.3.1	The dative causer revisited	153

CHAPTER 5

	The syntax of marked anticausatives: Part I	155
5.1	The origin of anticausative morphology	156
5.1.1	Lexicalist accounts of the causative alternation revisited	157
5.1.2	The marked/unmarked contrast from a typological perspective	159
5.2	The phrase-structural representation of anticausative morphology	163

5.2.1	The morpho-syntactic properties of German marked anticausatives	165
5.2.1.1	Semantic intransitivity	165
5.2.1.2	Syntactic transitivity	166
5.2.1.3	Reflexive anticausatives: Resolving the contradiction	172
5.2.2	A typology of Voice	174
5.3	German marked anticausatives meet the unaccusativity diagnostics	179
5.3.1	Auxiliary selection	180
5.3.2	Prenominal past participle	182
5.3.3	'Was-für' split	185
5.3.3.1	A further problem with the 'was-für' split	188
5.3.4	Split-NPs	191
5.3.5	Topicalization of Subject + Participle II	194
5.3.6	Passive	197
5.3.7	Datives	198
5.3.8	NOM-DAT order	199
5.3.9	Resultatives	201
5.3.10	The weak/strong reading of indefinites and bare plurals	202
5.3.11	Unaccusativity tests: Conclusion	207

CHAPTER 6

	Generic middles	211
6.1	The core characteristics of middles	211
6.2	Syntactic accounts	213
6.3	Pre-syntactic/lexicalist accounts	218
6.4	The source of the middle agent in a non-lexicalist framework	219
6.4.1	The causative alternation and the syntax of marked anticausatives	221
6.4.2	Middles at the C-I interface	224
6.4.2.1	Agentive Roots and V + Theme combinations	225
6.4.2.2	Verbs forming unmarked anticausatives	226
6.4.2.3	Verbs forming marked anticausatives	227
6.4.3	The source of the agent implicature	229
6.5	Unmarked middles in English and Dutch	235
6.6	A short discussion of impersonal middles	238

CHAPTER 7

	The syntax of marked anticausatives: Part II	247
7.1	Introduction	247
7.2	External argument "reduction" within a configurational theta theory	253

7.2.1	Binding theory	256
7.2.2	Verbal agreement and case	259
7.2.3	The derivations	260
7.2.4	Case under phase theory	263
7.3	Motivating the derivation of non-thematic reflexives	269
7.3.1	Dative causers again	269
7.3.1.1	A further note on dative antecedents	274
7.3.2	Scrambling and raising	276
7.3.3	Long-distance binding	279
7.4	The 'es-construction' and the 'stray accusative construction'	282
7.4.1	The causative alternation in Icelandic	286
7.4.2	Syntactic transitivity	292
7.4.3	Semantic transitivity	296
7.4.4	The origin of the FATE semantics	299
7.5	Conclusion	302
