

|                                                                                                 |            |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------|
| FOREWORD                                                                                 | v   |
| BRIAN BUTTERWORTH, BERNARD COMRIE, AND ÖSTEN DAHL                                        |            |
| Introduction                                                                                    | 1          |
| JANET DEAN FODOR                                                                         |            |
| Constraints on gaps: is the parser a significant influence?                                     | 9          |
| MARK STEEDMAN                                                                            |            |
| On the generality of the nested-dependency constraint and the reason for an exception in Dutch  | 35         |
| LARRY M. HYMAN                                                                           |            |
| Form and substance in language universals                                                       | 67         |
| BERNARD COMRIE                                                                           |            |
| Form and function in explaining language universals                                             | 87         |
| ÖSTEN DAHL                                                                               |            |
| Temporal distance: remoteness distinctions in tense-aspect systems                              | 105        |
| AKE VIBERG                                                                               |            |
| The verbs of perception: a typological study                                                    | 123        |
| ALISON GOPNIK                                                                            |            |
| Conceptual and semantic change in scientists and children: why there are no semantic universals | 163        |
| BJÖRN LINDBLOM, PETER MACNEILAGE, andMICHAEL STUDDERT-KENNEDY                       |            |
| Self-organizing processes and the explanation of phonological universals                        | 181        |
| PETER HOWELL and STUART ROSEN                                                            |            |
| Natural auditory sensitivities as universal determiners of phonemic contrasts                   | 205        |
| R. COLLIER                                                                               |            |
| Some physiological and perceptual constraints on tonal systems                                  | 237        |
| GEERT E. BOOIJ                                                                           |            |
| Principles and parameters in prosodic phonology                                                 | 249        |
| NAME INDEX                                                                               | 281 |
| SUBJECT INDEX                                                                            | 287 |
| LANGUAGE AND LANGUAGE-GROUP INDEX                                                        | 291 |