

CONTENTS

EDITORS' NOTES	1
Veronica G. Thomas, Floraline I. Stevens
1. Building a Contextually Responsive Evaluation Framework: Lessons from Working with Urban School Interventions	3
Veronica G. Thomas The chapter discusses the conceptual underpinnings and overarching themes of the Talent Development evaluation framework and makes recommendations for minimizing evaluation problems in diverse urban settings.
2. Evaluating the Co-Construction of the Family, School, and Community Partnership Program in a Low-Income Urban High School	25
Velma LaPoint, Henry L. Jackson This chapter describes the collaborative evaluation of the co-construction of a school-based family, school, and community partnership program for black students attending an urban high school.
3. A Culturally Responsive Evaluation Approach Applied to the Talent Development School-to-Career Intervention Program	37
Jo-Anne L. Manswell Butty, Malva Daniel Reid, Velma LaPoint A culturally responsive approach in evaluating an urban school-to-career intervention program resulted in both successes and challenges.
4. Successes and Challenges in Triangulating Methodologies in Evaluations of Exemplary Urban Schools	49
Donna Penn Towns, ZewelANJI Serpell Triangulating methodologies in evaluation allowed for stakeholder involvement and revealed contexts that a narrower approach might have failed to illuminate.
5. Talent Development Professional Development Evaluation Model: A Paradigm Shift	63
Constance M. Ellison The chapter discusses the Talent Development Professional Development program evaluation design, which is consistent with the Talent Development evaluation framework.

6. Commentary: Do Talent Development Project Evaluations Demonstrate a Coherent Approach?	79
Floraline I. Stevens
This commentary examines the extent to which the chapters in this volume used a coherent, contextually responsive evaluation framework. It also offers suggestions about possible alternative evaluation efforts to produce more powerful and comprehensive outcome information.
7. Commentary: Can Critical Theories of or on Race Be Used in Evaluation Research in Education?	85
Laurence Parker
This commentary explores the utility of critical race theory in the evaluation process in education, particularly in regard to the epistemological and methodological perspectives put forth by the Talent Development Model.
Index	95