

Contents

Chapter One:	Introduction
	1. Language and power	1
	2. Investigating power in a close-knit group	2
	3. Latent and emergent networks	4
	4. Interventions as interruptions in discourse	6
	5. The structure of the book	8
	6. The data and the participants	10
	6.1 The data	10
	6.2 The participants	17
Chapter Two:	Towards a dynamic model of discourse
	1. Introductory	23
	2. A modular approach to discourse structure	24
	2.1 The exchange structure	24
	2.2 Action structure	26
	2.3 Ideational structure	27
	2.4 The participation framework	29
	2.5 The information state	32
	2.6 Levels or modules?	33
	3. Turns and floors	34
	4. Turns as on-record “speakings”	37
	5. The floor as participation space in the discourse	42
	6. Topics	47
Chapter Three:	Defining power
	1. Power as inherent to verbal interaction	53
	2. Self-image, status and dominance	54
	3. Definitions of power	55
	3.1 Power as the capacity to impose one’s will	56
	3.2 The consensual view of power	58
	3.3 Power as a commodity and power as a discursive force	58

	3.4 Power as the capacity to achieve one's aims	59
	4. Defining the exercise of power	61
Chapter Four:	Intervention as interruption in social science research
	1. Preliminary remarks	63
	2. Interruption as a theoretical term	64
	3. Interruptions as simultaneous speech	65
	4. Operationalising interruption as a variable in experimental research	73
	5. Conceptualising the term "interruption" within conversation analysis	77
	6. Taxonomies of interruption	81
	7. Interpretive criteria in evaluating interruptions	88
	8. Interruptions as face-threatening behaviour and the exercise of power	92
	9. A return to the "prudish view" of interruptions	93
	10. Interrupting as a reprehensible social activity: the lay interpretation	100
	11. Towards a definition of interruption	105
Chapter Five:	Types of verbal intervention in family discourse
	1. Introduction	109
	2. Turn-internal interventions	111
	2.1 Off-record minimal listener responses	112
	2.2 Turn-internal support and agreement	115
	2.3 Looking for space on the floor: the preemptive bid	116
	2.4 Responding and contradicting turn- internally	121
	3. Apparent interventions due to lack of synchronisation	124
	4. Intervening without overlap: the "silent interruption"	129
	4.1 Petering out	129
	4.2 Cutting in	130
	5. Projecting turn-completion and intervening at tone unit boundaries	132

	6. Blatant interventions	135
	6.1 Blatant interventions of a negative kind	136
	6.2 Blatant interventions of a positive kind	140
Chapter Six:	Latent and emergent networks
	1. Introductory remarks	145
	2. The concept of network in social science research	146
	3. Morphological and interactional features of a network	149
	3.1 Morphological features	149
	3.2 Interactional features	152
	4. Latent and emergent networks	154
	5. The development of an emergent network	156
	6. An individual member's status within the latent family network	160
	6.1 The peripheral member	163
	6.2 The member as competitor	166
	6.3 The member as authority and resource person	169
Chapter Seven:	Status in the emergent network
	1. Introduction	173
	2. Dramatising the self	174
	3. The negotiation of status in an emergent network	176
	4. A detailed analysis	181
	5. Requests and narratives	190
Chapter Eight:	Interventions and the negotiation of status and power
	1. Introductory remarks	195
	2. Struggling for power as a resource person: the data	195
	3. Determining the emergent networks	204
	4. Attempting to open up a second floor	209
	5. The centrality index and the measurement of status	212

6.	Setting up and consolidating status as a resource person	219
7.	Challenging a position of power	225
8.	Establishing power as a narrator	234
9.	Regaining status as a narrator	240
Chapter Nine:	Intervention research in and beyond family discourse
1.	Introduction	247
2.	Status, power and the exercise of power	248
3.	Emergent networks in radio phone-in programmes	251
4.	Perceiving interventions as interruptive: evidence for face loss	257
5.	Gathering further data	263
Notes		267
References		273
Author and subject index		289