

Contents

Preface	vii
Preface to the second edition	xi
Acknowledgements	xiii
Acknowledgements for the second edition	xiv
Part 1: Concepts and cases	1
1. What is e-moderating?	3
Jane's diary	4
E-moderating, a new way of teaching	9
Training e-moderators at Monash	10
Teaching and learning online	11
Open University Business School in Wales case study	12
Systems	15
Networking software	17
Online networking for education and training	17
Costs	20
Why bother?	22
2. A model for online in education and training	24
About the OU	24
Building a model of online teaching and learning	25
Methodology	26
Five-stage model	28
Stage one: access and motivation	30
Stage two: online socialization	32
Stage three: information exchange	38
Stage four: knowledge construction	41
Stage five: development	48

3. E-moderating qualities and roles	51
What do e-moderators do?	51
E-moderator competencies	53
Recruiting e-moderators	53
Who might you work with?	56
Qantas College Online case study	58
Key issues for e-moderators	59
E-moderating with synchronous network platforms	67
Supporting distance language learners through synchronous conferencing	71
Abacus Virtual College case study	73
Open University Centre for Modern Languages case study	75
Celebrate!	79
4. Training e-moderators	80
Plan to train	80
Training of e-moderators in the OUBS	83
Training programme design	85
Evaluation	86
OUBS training programme	86
Level one: Welcome	88
Level two: Induction	90
Level three: Teaching	93
Level four: Knowledge construction	94
Level five: Development	96
Developing use of a VLE at Caledonian Business School	100
Monitoring the work of trained e-moderators	102
5. E-moderators and the participants' experience	104
Access and participation	105
Student orientation at Monash	107
Learning styles and approaches	110
Widening access	112
Assessment processes	112
Disabilities and online working	115
University of Maryland University College case study	118
Corporate training and development	119
Gender and e-moderating	120
E-moderators and lurkers	122
OU Master's course case study	125
Participant induction	128
Scaffolding participants' engagement	130
2001 . . .	131

2003 where we've got to now . . .	131
First reflections	132
Half-way	133
The end in sight . . .	134
6. E-moderating: the key to the future of online teaching and learning	136
Scenarios	136
Scenario 1: Planet Contenteous	137
Scenario 2: Planet Instantia	139
Scenario 3: Planet Nomadic	140
Scenario 4: Planet Caf�elattia	143
What planet are you on?	145
Part 2: Resources for practitioners	149
E-moderating skills:
1 Taming online time	151
2 Components of online socialization	153
3 How to weave	155
4 Treading on cultural toes	157
5 Presence	160
6 E-moderation principles for productive conferencing	162
7 Conference housekeeping	164
8 Knowledge sharing and construction	166
9 E-moderating with synchronous conferencing	168
Managing e-moderating:
10 Using the five-stage model	170
11 Keeping e-moderating costs down	176
12 Evaluating and assessing participation online	178
13 Training e-moderators	182
14 Boosting participation	184
15 Monitoring e-moderating	187
16 Communicating online	189
Online participants:
17 Encouraging self-managing groups	193
18 Users with disabilities	195
19 Induction	197
20 Supporting and developing online novices	199
21 Understanding lurkers	202
22 Valuing online diversity	204

Exploring online:

23	A virtual learning environment parable	207
24	Myth busters	210
25	A future scenario	212
26	What will we call ourselves?	214
27	Conference text examples	217

References	230
------------	-----

Index	240
-------	-----