

CONTENTS

Chapter 1	Personality and Politics	1
	Fred I. Greenstein, Princeton University
	Introduction	1
	Basic Conceptual Distinctions	5
	Overall Theoretical Issues	18
	A Classification of the Personality-and-Politics Literature	30
	Case Studies of Individual Political Actors	32
	Typological Multi-Case Studies of Political Actors	44
	Aggregative Analyses of Personality and Politics	60
	The Contextual Nature of Personality-and-Politics Connections: An Illustrative Literature Review	68
	Summary and Conclusions	71
Chapter 2	Political Socialization	93
	David O. Sears, University of California, Los Angeles
	Attachment to the Political System	96
	Preadult Development of Partisan Predispositions	117
	The Persistence of Residues from Preadult Political Socialization	127
	Concluding Comment	136
Chapter 3	Political Recruitment	155
	Moshe M. Czudnowski, Northern Illinois University
	Introduction: The Relevance of Recruitment and Recruitment Studies	155
	Concepts, Perspectives, and Models	159
	Selected Empirical Findings: The Major Variables	177
	Conclusion: A Researchable Model for the Study of Recruitment	229

Chapter 4	Group Theories	243
	J. David Greenstone, University of Chicago
	Introduction: Economy, Society, and Political Groups	243
	Bentley's Vision of Political Process: Group=Activity=Interest	253
	Organizational and Institutional Constraints in Truman's The Governmental Process	262
	Dahl's Who Governs? : Active Leadership, Regime Norms, and Citizen Quiescence in the Group Process	267
	McConnell's Antipluralist Critique: Private Power as a Constraint on the Group Process	272
	Rigidified Group Politics: Public Policy Constraints in the Work of Theodore J. Lowi	278
	Group Theories, Social Groups, and Demands for Radical Change	285
	Conclusion: Political Reality and Empirical Concepts in the Group Theories Tradition	306
Chapter 5	Organization Theory and Political Science	319
	Dennis J. Palumbo, City University of New York, Brooklyn College
	Introduction	319
	The Political Versus Rational-Choice Models of Organizational Behavior	322
	Rationality as Process Instead of Success in Achieving Goals	327
	Income Distribution Effects and Cost-Benefit Analysis	328
	The Limits to Omniscient Rationality	331
	Decision Theory and Uncertainty	335
	Implications for the Theory of Rational Choice	347
	The Anatomy of Decision Making	350
	Power in Organizational Theory	353
	Centralization and Decentralization in Organization	356
	Facts and Values in Decisions	358
	Conclusions	360
	Index	373