1 Introduction	1
1.1 'Pronoun' as a category	1
1.1.1 Defining pronouns	2
1.1.2 Two types of 'pronouns'	4
1.2 Basis of the distinction	6
1.2.1 Differentiating characteristics	9
1.2.2 Possibility of gradation	12
1.3 Position of third person pronouns	13
1.4 'Free-pronoun' and 'bound-pronoun' languages	15
1.4.1 Two kinds of agreement	16
1.4.2 Disparity between pronominal systems	18
1.4.3 Obligatoriness	22
1.4.4 Stability	25
1.4.5 Nature of the distinction	28
1.4.6 Only a speculation	29
1.5 Languages without personal pronouns	30
1.6 Structure of the monograph	31
Part I: Personal Pronouns	35
2 Relation with the Referent	37
2.1 Introduction	37
2.2 Dissociation from the referent	38
2.2.1 Referentiality of personal pronouns	40
2.2.2 File cards for referents	42
2.2.3 Use of alternative devices	43
2.3 Notion of definiteness	47
2.3.1 Evidence for definiteness	48
2.3.2 Evidence against definiteness	48
2.3.3 Personal pronouns as determiners	50
2.4 Association with the nominal category	52
2.4.1 Inability to take modifiers and complements	53
2.4.2 Association with numerals	55
2.5 Conflicting characteristics	56
2.6 Summary	57

3	Coreference and Non-Coreference	58
3.1	Logophoric non-coreference	58
3.1.1	Third person 'logophors'	62
3.1.2	Anaphoric pronouns	66
3.1.3	Contrast between logophoric and anaphoric pronouns	67
3.2	Anaphora among personal pronouns and proforms	74
3.3	Distinctions in the predicate	78
3.3.1	Reflexive meaning	79
3.3.2	Switch-reference	84
3.3.3	Reciprocal meaning	85
3.3.4	Modal distinctions	87
3.4	Summary	89
4	Association with Grammatical Categories	91
4.1	Introduction	91
4.2	Association with the category of number	91
4.2.1	Homogeneous and heterogeneous plurals	93
4.2.2	Plurality and conjunction	95
4.2.3	Dichotomous association	99
4.2.4	Combinations of pronouns	100
4.2.5	Minimal and augmented forms	101
4.2.6	Inclusory conjunction	103
4.2.7	Hierarchy of number marking	105
4.3	Association with the category of gender	109
4.3.1	Restricted occurrences	109
4.3.2	Explanations for irregularity	110
4.3.3	Politeness distinctions	111
4.4	Association with the category of case	112
4.4.1	Sagittal case marking	113
4.4.2	Prominence of speech act participants	115
4.4.3	Direct-inverse marking	116
4.4.4	Constraint on the occurrence of bound themes	117
4.5	Summary	118
5	Conflicting Characteristics	120
5.1	Introduction	120
5.2	Prominence of speech roles	121
5.2.1	Prominence of the speaker	122
5.2.2	Prominence of the addressee	124
5.2.3	Hierarchy of nominal categories	125
5.3	Personal pronouns as Janus-like	128
5.4	Basis of differentiation	130
5.5	Summary	131

6	The Position of Third Person Pronouns	132
6.1	Introduction	132
6.2	'Two-person' and 'three-person' languages	134
6.2.1	Nature of the affinity	135
6.2.2	Distinction between third person pronouns and demonstratives	138
6.3	Gender distinctions	138
6.4	Person-oriented and distance-oriented demonstratives	140
6.4.1	Exceptions to the correlation	143
6.5	Distinctions in other areas of grammar	145
6.6	Position of language families	147
6.6.1	Two-person languages	147
6.6.2	Three-person languages	148
6.7	Functional distinctions	149
6.8	Summary	150
Part II: Proforms		151
7	The Structure of Proforms	153
7.1	Introduction	153
7.2	Paradigms of proforms	153
7.2.1	Order of constituents	157
7.2.2	Identifying the constituents	161
7.3	Complex structures	163
7.3.1	Complexity in the expression of functional distinctions	164
7.3.2	Complexity in the expression of general concepts	169
7.3.3	Effects of grammaticalization	171
7.3.4	Use of peripheral concepts as basic constituents	172
7.4	Summary	173
8	Constituent Elements of Proforms	175
8.1	Introduction	175
8.2	Functional distinctions	175
8.2.1	Distinctions among demonstratives	177
8.2.2	Distinctions among interrogative-indefinites	182
8.2.3	Distinctions among relative-anaphors	183
8.3	Neutralization of functional distinctions	186
8.3.1	Combining all the three main functions	186
8.3.2	Combining demonstratives with interrogative-indefinites	187
8.3.3	Combining demonstratives with relative-anaphors	189
8.3.4	Combining interrogative-indefinites with relative-anaphors	189

8.4	General concepts	190
8.4.1	Word-class distinctions	190
8.4.2	Distinctions among different word classes	192
8.4.3	Representation of general concepts	195
8.5	Overlap between pronominal functions and general concepts	196
8.6	Summary	198
9	Characteristics of Proforms	200
9.1	Introduction	200
9.2	Denoting a general concept	200
9.2.1	Linguistic and extra-linguistic identifications	202
9.2.2	Persistence of indefiniteness	207
9.2.3	Introducing new entities	209
9.3	Using proforms for different purposes	210
9.3.1	Indefiniteness of interrogatives	211
9.3.2	Range of occurrence	212
9.4	Associating with different categories	214
9.4.1	Notion of pragmatic reference	215
9.4.2	Notion of semantic reference	220
9.4.3	Notion of scope	222
9.5	Summary	224
10	Interrogative–Indefinite Puzzle	226
10.1	Introduction	226
10.1.1	Puzzle about the interrogative–indefinite relationship	227
10.1.2	As part of a system of proforms	229
10.1.3	Semantic differences	231
10.1.4	Solution to the puzzle	232
10.2	Request for information	234
10.2.1	Use of interrogative intonation	234
10.2.2	Use of interrogative particles	235
10.2.3	Use of interrogative mood	238
10.2.4	Derived interrogatives	238
10.3	Restricting the question to a constituent	240
10.3.1	Shifting the pronoun to the sentence-initial position	240
10.3.2	Shifting to other focus positions	242
10.3.3	Use of focus particles	242
10.3.4	Use of focus constructions	243
10.4	Combining the two notions	244
10.4.1	Use of distinct intonations	245
10.4.2	Use of distinct question particles	245
10.5	Non-marking and double-marking	246
10.6	Summary	248

11	Other Related Puzzles	250
11.1	Introduction	250
11.2	Derivation of indefinite pronouns	250
11.2.1	Differentiating languages	252
11.2.2	Non-differentiating languages	255
11.2.3	Possible counter-examples	257
11.2.4	Distinction between 'even' and 'at least'	258
11.2.5	Additional distinctions	260
11.2.6	Grammaticalization of marked indefinites	261
11.3	Puzzle about indirect 'questions'	262
11.4	Interrogative–relative puzzle	266
11.5	Summary	271
12	Concluding Remarks	272
12.1	Definitions for pronouns	272
12.2	Plurality and conjunction	274
12.3	Pragmatic and semantic identity and reference	275
12.4	Interrogation and indefiniteness	276
