
Contents

Acknowledgements	page ix
Introduction	1
1 Critical histories	5
1598–1741: a bumpy ride	5
1741–1904: enter Shakespear	11
Enshrinement	13
A. C. Bradley and character study	18
The 1930s: images and patterns	21
Tillyard and the ‘Elizabethan world picture’	26
Jan Kott: Shakespeare our contemporary	31
Further reading	34
2 Psychoanalysis	36
Freud and his early followers	39
C. G. Jung and the theory of ‘types’ and ‘archetypes’	44
Jacques Lacan and the theory of the subject	51
Post-Lacanian psychoanalytic approaches	58
Further reading	61
3 New Historicism	63
Stephen Greenblatt: ‘Invisible Bullets’	71
Louis Montrose: New Historicism meets psychoanalysis	74
Leonard Tennenhouse and the interest in power	77
Later developments: New Historicism meets gender	82
Further reading	87
4 Cultural Materialism	89
Political Shakespeare : a landmark text	91

Dollimore and Sinfield: literature and power	94
Terence Hawkes and the politics of meaning	105
Further reading	109
5 New factualisms	111
The 'new biography'	111
Attribution studies	118
Editing	124
Further reading	132
6 Gender studies and queer theory	134
Boy actors	137
Political feminisms	140
Queer theory	151
Further reading	160
7 Postcolonial criticism	162
The Tempest	164
Postcolonial Tempests	180
Othello	183
Further reading	186
8 Shakespeare in performance	188
Henry V in performance	193
The Olivier version	197
Stratford-upon-Avon	198
Political performance criticism	206
Further reading	209
Index	210