

Contents

GENERAL INTRODUCTION	I
PART I: THE COLLECTIVE USE AND EVOLUTION OF CONCEPTS
SECTION A: RATIONALITY AND CONCEPTUAL DIVERSITY
Introduction	35
1. The Problem of Conceptual Change	41
1.1: The Recognition of Conceptual Diversity	41
1.2: Frege, Collingwood and the cult of Systematicity	52
1.3: Rationality and its Jurisdictions	85
1.4: The Revolutionary Illusion	96
SECTION B: RATIONAL ENTERPRISES AND THEIR EVOLUTION
Introduction	133
2. Intellectual Disciplines: Their Goals and Problems	145
2.1: Scientific Disciplines and their Explanatory Ideals	145
2.2: Scientific Concepts and Explanatory Procedures	155
2.3: The Nature of Conceptual Problems in Science	173
2.4: A Digression on 'Representation'	192
3. Intellectual Disciplines: Their Historical Development	200
3.1: Conceptual Variation	204
3.2: Intellectual Selection	222
3.3: The Objective Constraints on Scientific Change	242
4. Intellectual Professions: Their Organization and Evolution	261
4.1: The Professional Embodiment of Science	262

xii Contents

4.2: The Generations of Judges	281
4.3: Intellectual Ecology and Historical Understanding	300
5. Interlude: Evolution and the Human Sciences	319
5.1: Evolution and Cosmic Progress	324
5.2: Languages and Societies as Historical Entities	340
SECTION C: RATIONALITY AND HUMAN ADAPTATION
Introduction	359
6. The Variety of Rational Enterprises	364
6.1: Non-Scientific Disciplines	364
6.2: Compact, Diffuse, and Would-be Disciplines	378
6.3: The Spectrum of Non-Disciplinary Activities	395
7. The Apparent Invariants of Thought and Language	412
7.1: The Rationality of our Everyday Conceptual Framework	417
7.2: Nativism, Functionalism, and the Language Capacity	446
8. Conclusion: The Cunning of Reason	478
8.1: The Standpoint of Rationality	484
8.2: The Escape from the A Priori	495
Appendix: Research Programme	504
Index	509