

Contents

Acknowledgements	viii
Introduction	ix
CHAPTER ONE Suffering	1
1 'We feel pain, not painlessness'	2
2 The 'pendulum between pain and boredom'	5
3 Are some lives worse than others?	8
4 The value of suffering	11
5 Conclusion	12
CHAPTER TWO Purpose	15
1 The question 'Why?': means and ends	16
2 'The end had ceased to charm'	19
3 The Ozymandias perspective	21
4 The endless cycle of generation	24
5 To travel and to arrive	26
6 Is life absurd?	29
7 Nature's remedy	32
8 The life of purpose and its alternatives	34
CHAPTER THREE God	42
1 Insignificant man	42
2 God's purpose and the problem of evil	47

3	The life hereafter	52
4	Meaning and the religious calendar	54
CHAPTER FOUR Death		57
1	Is death the end?	58
2	The consolation of nature	62
3	When death is present	66
4	Death and other forms of non-existence	67
5	Death and the goodness of life	72
6	Death and the desire for life	78
7	Conclusion: the meaning of death	82
CHAPTER FIVE The value of life		86
1	The 'sanctity' of life	86
2	The value of human and other existence	94
CHAPTER SIX Self-realization		105
CHAPTER SEVEN Nature		109
1	The Garden of Eden	109
2	'Artificial men and factitious passions'	111
3	Before and after language	115
4	'Must societies be abolished?'	120
5	The value of nature	121
CHAPTER EIGHT Homo sapiens		127
1	The 'political animal'	127
2	The rational life	130
3	The life of enquiry	135
4	The aesthetic life	139
5	The 'higher' pleasures	142
6	The moral life	151
7	Men and women	154
8	Conclusion	161
CHAPTER NINE Happiness and desire		165
1	Desire and satisfaction	165
2	Actual and potential desires	168

3	Desire and the 'Greatest Happiness Principle'	173
4	Happiness and truth	177
5	Happiness and duty	180
CHAPTER TEN Who am I?		189
1	The individual and society	189
2	'Man makes himself'	193
3	Freedom and reason	197
4	Being true to oneself	203
5	The limits of reason	205
6	Homo ludens	208
Index		218