

CONTENTS

1 INTRODUCTION

1.1 'Free'—a ruling	1
1.2 'Determinism'—a ruling	4
1.3 Dramatis personae	5
1.4 The unimportance of determinism	7
1.5 Theories and theorists	9
1.6 A sketch of the argument	17

PART I METAPHYSICS AND COMMITMENT

2 LIBERTARIANISM, ACTION, AND SELF-DETERMINATION

2.1 Introduction; the argument summarized	25
2.2 Libertarianism; a constraint	31
2.3 Rational explanations of actions	33
2.4 Libertarianism: the constraint applied	41
2.5 Locating indeterminism	43
2.6 Can indeterminism help?	44
2.7 Evasion: the notion of choice	45
2.8 The impossibility of self-determination as to desire	48
2.9 Relocating indeterminism	51
2.10 A 'Leibnizian' view	52
2.11 Restatement and conclusion	56

3	KANT AND COMMITMENT
3.1	Commitment theories—their structure	61
3.2	‘Neutral’ and ‘Rational’ freedom	64
3.3	Non-moral freedom	65
3.4	‘Will’ and ‘desire’	66
3.5	Kant’s commitment theory	67
3.6	The inescapability of belief in freedom	69
3.7	Another approach	71
3.8	A Subjectivist conclusion	72
4	COMMITMENT, ILLUSION, AND TRUTH
4.1	Double standards	74
4.2	Experiential facts	75
4.3	Appearances and their reality	77
4.4	Reality and its appearances	80
5	NON-RATIONAL COMMITMENT; A VIEW OF FREEDOM
5.1	Introduction	84
5.2	Feelings, attitudes, practices, concepts, and beliefs	84
5.3	Commitment and rationality	88
6	PHENOMENOLOGY, COMMITMENT, AND WHAT MIGHT HAPPEN
6.1	Feelings and the causality of reason; doings and happenings	93
6.2	Determinism, action, and the self; a thought-experiment	95
6.3	What might happen	100
6.4	Natural compatibilism	105

6.5	The true centre of commitment	110
6.6	Satkāyadr̥ṣṭi	117

PART II THE OBJECTIVIST BASIS

7 OBJECTIVISM: PRELIMINARIES

7.1	How things stand; determinism dismissed	123
7.2	Potential free agents	125
7.3	A provisional definition	129

8 CHOICE

8.1	Introduction	133
8.2	Ability to choose	134
8.3	Fido's choice	141
8.4	Conclusion	143

9 SELF-CONSCIOUSNESS

9.1	Mental reflexivity and full self-consciousness	146
9.2	An attempt at demystification	151
9.3	The idea of mental singleness	154
9.4	Self-consciousness, someonehood, and freedom	161
9.5	Who is to blame?	166
9.6	Self-consciousness and choice	167
9.7	Conclusion and anticipation	168

PART III THE SUBJECTIVIST CHALLENGE

10 EVIDENCE AND INDEPENDENCE

10.1	The principal claim	173
10.2	Explicit* belief	173

10.3	The principle of independence	174
10.4	Evident propositions	176
10.5	Fully self-conscious belief	176
10.6	Evidentness—a natural picture	178
10.7	‘Causally evident’	179
10.8	Generalization; evident properties	180
10.9	The problem restated—non-causally evident properties	180
10.10	Causation and constitution; C-statements	184
10.11	Options and questions	190
10.12	Constitution relations—complications	191
10.13	Summary; a compatibilist way out	194
10.14	Transitional	196

11 CONTRAVENTION AND CONVENTION

11.1	Introductory	200
11.2	Contracts	201
11.3	The attribution of belief	204
11.4	The mystery draw	207
11.5	Natural and conventional properties	211
11.6	Omniscience	212
11.7	Immorality	213
11.8	Pain	222
11.9	‘E*’	225
11.10	Conclusion	227
11.11	Anticipation	230

12	THE SPECTATOR SUBJECT AND INTEGRATION
12.1	Introductory	233
12.2	Une étrangère	234
12.3	The normal and the spectatorial	236
12.4	A race of Spectators	237
12.5	Restatement	239
12.6	The Spectator and belief in freedom	240
12.7	An initial conclusion	242
12.8	The Integration condition	243
12.9	An Attitudinal-theoretic position	246
12.10	Determinists—life and theory	247
13	THE NATURAL EPICTETANS
13.1	An initial description	249
13.2	Elaboration	252
13.3	Hindrances and indecision	255
14	THE EXPERIENCE OF ABILITY TO CHOOSE
14.1	Preliminaries	259
14.2	Experience of indecision	264
14.3	Backtracking	266
14.4	The Ability Suggestion and the Ability Account	267
14.5	An alternative approach?	271
14.6	The Ability Account, the Basic Structural Account, and a quasi-Kantian view	271
14.7	Counterattack	275
14.8	The rejection of the Ability Suggestion	276
14.8.1	Up-to-me-ness and the being of limited conception	276

14.8.2	The Spectator and the natural Epictetans	279
14.8.3	The Genuine Incompatibilist Determinist	281
14.9	The Indecision Suggestion	284
14.10	Objection: the concept of choice	285
14.11	Objectivist options	287
15	SUBJECTIVISM AND THE EXPERIENCE* OF FREEDOM
15.1	The espousal of Subjectivism	293
15.2	Subjectivism: prospects for a positive theory of freedom	295
15.3	Contravention: the options	296
15.4	Conclusion	305
16	ANTINOMY AND TRUTH
16.1	What do we want?	307
16.2	What should we believe?	311
Appendix A	A problem about experience	318
Appendix B	Free choices and objective branching points	319
Appendix C	The brain in the vat as free agent	320
Appendix D	A strange god	322
Appendix E	The sense of self	323
Appendix F	The Objectivists' last ditch	329
Bibliography		333
Index		337