

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Acknowledgments	IX
Bibliographical Note	XI
Abbreviations	XIII
Introduction	3

PART ONE: THE FLORENTINE DEBATE OF 1435

I. Bruni and Biondo: Dramatis Personae of the Florentine Debate	13
II. Dante's Linguistic Theories: Elixir Vitae of the Florentine Debate	24
III. Dante, Bruni, and the Beginning of the questione della lingua	30
IV. Dante, Biondo, and the Beginning of Romance Philology	39
V. The Ramifications of the Florentine Debate: The Contribution of Guarino, Poggio and Filelfo	51
VI. The Florentine Debate and the Unique Position of Valla	69
VII. The Florentine Debate, Alberti, and the Reaffirmation of the questione della lingua . .	82

PART TWO: DANTE'S THEORIES OF LANGUAGE AND STYLE

VIII. Dante's Notion of the Illustrious Vernacular: A Reappraisal	108
IX. "La lingua ch'io parlai fu tutta spenta:" Dante's Reappraisal of the Adamic Language (Paradiso XXVI, 124-138)	159

APPENDICES

I. The Binomial Latina Lingua/Grammatica in Dante and the Humanists	182
---	-----

II. Interconnection Between De Vulgari Eloquentia I, xi-xv; II, vi and Purgatorio XXIV, 42-62; XXVI, 92-123: A Clarification of the dolce stil novo	185
III. A Recent Contribution to the Florentine Debate of 1435: Mirko Tavoni's Latino, grammatica, volgare. Storia di una questione umanistica	189
Notes	209
Index	262