

Table of contents

Adresses of authors and editors	vii
Introduction	xI
Wichita word formation: Syntactic morphology David S. Rood	1
Morphology in the wrong place: A survey of preposed enclitics Michael Cysouw	17
Clitics or affixes? On the morphological status of the future-tense markers in Serbian Jasmina Milićević	39
The demarcation of morphology and syntax: A diachronic perspective on particle verbs Corrien Blom	53
When clitics become affixes, where do they come to rest? A case from Spanish Andrés Enrique-Arias	67
Grammatical hybrids: Between serialization, compounding and derivation in !Xun (North Khoisan) Bernd Heine and Christa König	81
The borderline between derivation and compounding Laurie Bauer	97
Compounding and derivation: Evidence for Construction Morphology Geert Booij	109
Selection in compounding and derivation Sergio Scalise, Antonietta Bisetto, and Emiliano Guevara	133
Compounding and affixation: Any difference? Pavol Štekauer	151

On a semantically grounded difference between derivation and compounding Bernard Fradin	161
Between compounding and derivation: Elements of word-formation corresponding to prepositions Dany Amiot	183
Cumulative exponence involving derivation: Some patterns for an uncommon phenomenon Davide Ricca	197
Revising the phonological motivation for splitting morphology Maria-Rosa Lloret	215
Derivation versus inflection in three inflecting languages Stela Manova	233
Antipassive sja -verbs in Russian: Between inflection and derivation Sergey Say	253
Slavic prefixes as state morphemes: From state to change-of-state and perfectivity Rok Žaucer	277
Delineating the boundary between inflection-class marking and derivational marking: The case of Sanskrit -aya Gregory T. Stump	293
Language index	311
Subject index	313