
Contents

List of abbreviations	ix
Introduction	1
PART I
Russell	9
1 Russell's first theory of denoting	11
I The elements	11
II The mathematical context	13
III Denoting, definition and identity	16
IV Three essential elements	17
V Post-PoM developments	20
2 The collapse of the first theory and the discovery of the theory of descriptions	22
I Introduction: the obscure passage in 'On Denoting'	22
II The argument: the 'substantial' round	24
(i) C2 is a different entity from C1	25
(ii) C1 cannot be a constituent of C2	26
(iii) 'But this cannot be an explanation', I	28
(iv) The third charge	32
III The argument: the 'symbolic' round	33
(i) The twin phenomena	34
(ii) Use and mention	37

IV	'But this cannot be an explanation', II	38
	(i) The burden of proof	38
	(ii) A survey of theoretical possibilities	38
	(iii) C2 as a description of C1	39
	(iv) Denoting and other logical relations	41
V	The transition	42
VI	The discovery of the theory of descriptions	45
3	The place of 'On Denoting' in Russell's development	52
I	'On Denoting' and Russell's ontological development: some preliminaries	53
II	Russell's case against Meinong	58
III	Russell's ontology in PoM reconsidered	61
IV	Methodological developments: 'every word must have some meaning'	66
V	Contextual definition	68
VI	The notion of an incomplete symbol	69
VII	The role of language	73
VIII	Some positive remarks	76
PART II
Frege		79
4	From Begriffsschrift to sense and reference	81
I	Introduction	81
II	The problem	82
III	Frege's solution in Bs.	90
IV	'Sinn und Bedeutung': the collapse of the first theory	94
V	'Sinn und Bedeutung': the new solution	101
5	Further considerations regarding sense and reference	106
I	The priority of the distinction for proper names	106
II	Sense and indirect speech	109
III	Sense as a route and empty senses	112
IV	Sense determines reference, I: the question of relativization	117
V	Sense determines reference, II: the conceptual model	121
VI	The application of Russell's argument in OD to Frege's distinction	127

PART III

Russell and Frege	133
6 Russell and Frege compared	135
I Introduction: the strategy	135
II The PoM theory of denoting and the theory of sense and reference: some preliminaries	137
III The common ground: propositionalism, sensism and the implied metaphysical model	139
IV The differences, and further similarities, in relation to the metaphysical model	144
V An apparent gap in Frege's argument	148
VI Can all expressions have sense?	151
VII The taxonomic difference: a diagnosis of Frege's position	155
VIII Frege's suppressed premise: are all names on a par?	157
IX The theory of descriptions versus sense and reference: an adjustment on the Russellian side	164
X Frege's description operator and the theory of descriptions	169
XI The progression towards transparency	173
7 The Russell–Frege enterprise and natural language	179
I Introduction	179
II Ordinary names and logically proper names	180
III What morals can we draw from illustration?	182
IV The revisionary nature of the Russell–Frege enterprise	187
V Logic as metaphysics	191
VI The latency of the metaphysical facet	197
VII Concluding remarks: the nature of the enterprise	199
Appendix A	203
The text of the obscure passage from 'On Denoting'	203
Appendix B	206
Russell's example in the latter half of paragraph (D) of the obscure passage	206

Appendix C

208

Some recent discussions of the obscure passage 208

I Searle, Blackburn and Code, and Hylton 208

II Pakaluk 210

III Kremer 213

IV Noonan 219

Bibliography

223

Index

227