

Contents

Preface xi

Part One

Chapter One. Objections to the topic. Limitations of an historical approach. The proper application of the word “sublime” traditionally disputed. An indefinable term? 1

Chapter Two. Longinus a Romantic? Importance of social considerations in his work. 7

Chapter Three. The measure of Longinus’s idealism. His practical approach to the sublime—a moderate experience. His conception of language “unliterary” by Mallarmé’s definition. His conception of the ideal not modern. 13

Chapter Four. The sublime of Dr. Johnson. Words cannot do justice to the ideal: the necessity of silence. 25

Chapter Five. Contrast of Johnson to the practitioners of the “religious” sublime. The ideal takes a material form, of which they may speak. Uneasiness of their position. 31

Chapter Six. Ironic and enthusiastic attitudes to the ideal: to speak of it or not? Irony of Mallarmé's attitude. His reluctance to name the ideal compared with Johnson's. Faith, a form of enthusiasm, and its literary product, the Word. Mallarmé's hopes of doing justice to the ideal in words. 39

Chapter Seven. Tendency of enthusiasts to name things without reflecting that the words are not the things themselves. Enthusiasm alone does not confer literary distinction (John Dennis). No one rhetorical figure specially suited for the expression of enthusiasm. Enthusiasm and hyperbole. Longinus's and the Romantics' attitudes to hyperbole contrasted. 47

Chapter Eight. Enthusiasm vulnerable to irony. Enthusiasm may be supplied by reader as well as writer. Important facts a defense of enthusiasm against irony. Enthusiasm disguises hyperbole's "departure from truth". Predominance of irony in modern attitude. Deceptive power of hyperbole not felt by modern critics. Hyperbole an exception to rule of literariness. 53

Chapter Nine. Postponement of discussion of hyperbole in Mallarmé. Synopsis of Kant's "Analytic of the Sublime". Objections to applying his theory to literature refuted. Literary version of his theory. 63

Chapter Ten. Phases of Kant's sublime moment related to positions on scale of height and depth. Inferior position assigned by enthusiasm (Burke). Bathos the literary result of unqualified enthusiasm. Argument of Kant's "Analytic" disputed by enthusiasts. Subliminal influence of irony on enthusiasts. Methods of completing Kant's sublime moment by introducing irony without subject's conscious knowledge. A new criterion of the sublime. 73

Chapter Eleven. Mallarmé eligible for consideration as a practitioner of the sublime by both old and new standards. His obscurity the product of irony; contrasted to obscurity of enthusiasts. His experiment in sublimation. A paradox: the theoretical impossibility of his practice of the sublime. Literary result of the paradox: a singular treatment of hyperbole. 85

Part Two

Chapter Twelve. The Context of the Word "Sublime" in Mallarmé's Prose.
I. Oeuvres complètes , pp. 716-719
II. Oeuvres complètes , pp. 261-262
III. Oeuvres complètes , pp. 299-302
IV. Oeuvres complètes , pp. 330-333
V. Oeuvres complètes , pp. 375-376
VI. Oeuvres complètes , pp. 366-367
VII. Oeuvres complètes , pp. 481 and 549	97
Chapter Thirteen. A Foreword to Further Inquiry: The Poems.	141
Conclusion	151
Appendix. Translations of French Passages.	159
Selected Bibliography	165
Notes	173
Index of Proper Names	209