

Contents

LIST OF PLATES	page vi
SERIES EDITORS' FOREWORD	ix
ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS	x
1 Introduction: Joseph Losey and the crisis of historical rupture	1
2 Losey in exile: The Sleeping Tiger (1954), A Man on the Beach (1955) and The Intimate Stranger (1956)	14
3 A question of background: class and the politics of impulse in Time Without Pity (1957), The Gypsy and the Gentleman (1957), Blind Date (1959) and The Criminal (1960)	40
4 Dystopic malevolence and the politics of collusion: Evan Jones's The Damned (1961), Eve (1962), King and Country (1964) and Modesty Blaise (1966)	92
5 Harold Pinter's time-image: The Servant (1963), Accident (1967) and The Go-Between (1971)	134
6 Three allegorical fables: Boom! (1968), Secret Ceremony (1968) and Figures in a Landscape (1970)	180
7 Bertolt Brecht and Galileo (1974)	212
8 Gender matters: A Doll's House (1973), The Romantic Englishwoman (1975) and Steaming (1985)	231
9 A second exile: Losey in Europe	263
10 Conclusion	273
THEATRE CREDITS AND FILMOGRAPHY	278
BIBLIOGRAPHY	299
INDEX	307

List of plates

- 1 Becoming-animal: Frank (Dirk Bogarde) and Glenda (Alexis Smith) react with alarm to the discovery of their affair by Glenda's husband, Dr Clive Esmond, in Losey's first British film, The Sleeping Tiger (1954). (Courtesy StudioCanal, Paris.) page 85
- 2 Reflection of a death foretold: the face of David Graham (Michael Redgrave) is doubled in the prison glass as his condemned son, Alec (Alec McCowen), displays a calm fatalism in Time Without Pity (1957). (BFI Collections. Courtesy of Janus Films.) 85
- 3 Amour fou: Keith Michell and Melina Mercouri make their pact with the Devil in The Gypsy and the Gentleman (1957). (Reproduced courtesy of Carlton International Media Limited/LFI.) 86
- 4 MacDonald Carey is on the wrong end of an umbrella as Oliver Reed and Shirley Ann Field look on with sadistic amusement in The Damned (1961). © 1961, renewed 1989 Columbia Pictures Industries, Inc. All rights reserved. Courtesy of Columbia Pictures. 86
- 5 Eve (Jeanne Moreau) seduces a smitten Tyvian (Stanley Baker) by telling a fabricated tale of her childhood in Eve (1962). (Courtesy of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. Reproduced by kind permission of Plaza Production International, Paris and Kino International, New York.) 87
- 6 'He's a vampire too, on his Sundays off': Barrett (Dirk Bogarde) sizes up his next victim, Tony (James Fox) at the beginning of The Servant (1963). (Courtesy StudioCanal, Paris.) 88
- 7 'We'll all be rat food before long': Pte Sparrow (Jeremy Spenser) gives some creature comfort to Pte Hamp (Tom Courtenay) on the eve of his execution in King and Country (1964). (Courtesy BHE British Home Entertainment.) 88

- 8 Monica Vitti and Terence Stamp strike a defensive pose in Modesty Blaise (1966). © 1966 Twentieth Century-Fox. All rights reserved. 89
- 9 Forbidden games: Robert Mitchum ‘menaces’ Mia Farrow during one of her staged rape fantasies in Secret Ceremony (1968). (Courtesy Universal Studios.) 90
- 10 The redoubtable Mrs Maudsley (Margaret Leighton) in Losey’s Palme d’Or winning The Go-Between (1971). (Courtesy Studio-Canal, Paris.) 90
- 11 Galileo (Topol) demonstrates his new (stolen) invention – the telescope – to the young Andrea (Iain Travers) in Losey’s film version of Bertolt Brecht’s Galileo (1974). (Reproduced by kind permission of Michael Kantor.) 91
- 12 Class conflict meets sexual politics as Patti Love confronts Vanessa Redgrave and Sarah Miles in Losey’s last film, Steaming (1985). (BFI Collections. Courtesy of Columbia Pictures and World Film Services, Inc.) 91