

TABLE OF CONTENTS

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS	vii
1. INTRODUCTION	1
1.1. Purposes of the study	1
1.2. The language of the corpus	2
2. REVIEW OF THE LITERATURE	5
2.1. Syntactic descriptions and the syntactic-pragmatic correlation hypothesis (SPCH)	5
2.2. Pragmatic descriptions	9
3. THE DATA-GENERAL OBSERVATIONS AND HYPOTHESES	13
3.1. Preliminary observations	13
3.2. Problems with the syntactic-pragmatic correlation hypothesis	16
3.2.1. LD in contrastive contexts	16
3.2.2. Introduction of new referents	19
3.3. Contrastiveness and topic shift	21
3.4. A new hypothesis — in search of LDs of minimal pragmatic motivation	24
3.5. Alternative syntactic analyses	26
3.6. The 'domain' of LD: sentence-topic and discourse-topic	28
3.6.1. The notion of discourse-topic	28
3.6.2. LD, sentence-topic, and discourse-topic in the corpus	31
4. PRONOMINAL DETACHMENTS	37
4.1. 'Personal' pronouns: first person: moi, nous	37
4.2. 'Nonpersonal' pronoun: ça	45
5. LEXICAL NP DETACHMENTS	49
5.1. With nonpersonal anaphor	49
5.1.1. NP c'est ...	49
5.1.2. NP ça V	58

5.2.	With personal anaphor: NP il/elle ...	59
5.2.1.	LD and information statuses — background	60
5.2.2.	The data	62
(I)	Introduction and summary	62
(II)	LD with Evoked referents	63
(III)	LD with New referents	68
5.2.3.	LD and the ya -cleft	75
5.2.4.	LD vs. NP-subjects: the grounding principle	80
5.3.	NP-LDs with nonsubject anaphors	89
5.4.	The definiteness constraint	92
6.	SPECIAL CASES	95
6.1.	'Topicalization' and 'Focus Movement' in spoken French	95
6.2.	No-anaphor LDs	98
6.3.	Double LDs	104
7.	CONCLUSION	111
NOTES		115
REFERENCES		121