CONTENTS

LIST OF CONTRIBUTORS

Foreword	xiii
Preface	xv
PART I. INTRODUCTION
Chapter 1. The Ecological Nature of Perceptual Systems
Rik Warren
 I. Why Perception? II. What Is There To Be Perceived? III. The Physical Bases for Perception IV. Adaptation of Perceptual Systems to the Environment V. The Environmental Reach of Perceptual Systems VI. The Environment, Perception, and Action VII. Conclusion References 	3 4 11 13 15 16 16
Chapter 2. Culture and Perception
Anne D. Pick and Herbert L. Pick, Jr.
 I. Introduction II. Pictorial Perception III. Visual Illusions IV. Perceptual Constancy V. Spatial Orientation References 	19 21 25 30 31 35

χi

CONTENTS vi

PART II. SENSORY DISORDERS AND PROSTHETICS

12

91

105

Chapter	3.	Perception	by	the	Deat
---------	----	------------	----	-----	------

Harry W. Hoemann

1.	Introduction	73
II.	Research Findings	44
III.	Methodological Problems	47
IV.	Perception of Language	54
	Trends and Directions for Future Research	58
• • •	References	60
Chap	oter 4. Perception by the Blind
	David H. Warren
I.	Introduction	65
11.	Audition	66
III.	Touch	70
IV.	Space Perception	74
v.	•	83
VI.		84
V 2.	References	86
Chap	oter 5. Prosthetics of Perceptual Systems
	John M. Kennedy, Daniel Klein, and Lochlan E. Magee

I.	Introduction
II.	Alleviating Deafness

94

98 III. Alleviating Blindness

102 IV. Discussion

References

PART III. AESTHETICS

Chapter 6. Aesthetic Theories

Irvin L. Child

ī	What Is Aesthetic Theory?	111
1.	•	112
11	Extrincic Theories	113

116

III. Intrinsic Theories

121 IV. Interactive Theories

128 V. Conclusions

128 References

II. Measuring Aesthetic Value References PART IV. ARCHITECTURE, MUSIC, ART, AND CINEMA Chapter 8. Perceptual Aspects of Architecture Kristina Hooper I. Introduction II. The Physical Forms of Architecture III. Evaluative Responses: Human Perceptions That Follow Architectural Form IV. The Architectural Design Process: Human Perceptions That Precede Architectural Forms V. Conclusions	CONTENTS	V11
I. Generating Forms II. Measuring Aesthetic Value References PART IV. ARCHITECTURE, MUSIC, ART, AND CINEMA Chapter 8. Perceptual Aspects of Architecture Kristina Hooper I. Introduction II. The Physical Forms of Architecture III. Evaluative Responses: Human Perceptions That Follow Architectural Form IV. The Architectural Design Process: Human Perceptions That Precede Architectural Forms V. Conclusions References Chapter 9. The Psychology of Music Diana Deutsch I. Introduction II. Recognition of Tonal Shape III. The Formation of Perceptual Configurations IV. Rhythm and Tempo V. Memory VI. Timbre Perception VII. Musical Preferences VIII. Neurological Substrates References Chapter 10. Art and Perception Julian Hochberg	Chapter 7. Generating and Measuring Aesthetic Forms
II. Measuring Aesthetic Value References PART IV. ARCHITECTURE, MUSIC, ART, AND CINEMA Chapter 8. Perceptual Aspects of Architecture Kristina Hooper I. Introduction II. The Physical Forms of Architecture III. Evaluative Responses: Human Perceptions That Follow Architectural Form IV. The Architectural Design Process: Human Perceptions That Precede Architectural Forms V. Conclusions References Chapter 9. The Psychology of Music Diana Deutsch I. Introduction II. Recognition of Tonal Shape III. The Formation of Perceptual Configurations IV. Rhythm and Tempo V. Memory VI. Timbre Perception VII. Musical Preferences VIII. Neurological Substrates References Chapter 10. Art and Perception Julian Hochberg	George Stiny
Chapter 8. Perceptual Aspects of Architecture Kristina Hooper I. Introduction II. The Physical Forms of Architecture III. Evaluative Responses: Human Perceptions That Follow Architectural Form IV. The Architectural Design Process: Human Perceptions That Precede Architectural Forms V. Conclusions References Chapter 9. The Psychology of Music Diana Deutsch I. Introduction II. Recognition of Tonal Shape III. The Formation of Perceptual Configurations IV. Rhythm and Tempo V. Memory VI. Timbre Perception VII. Musical Preferences VIII. Neurological Substrates References Chapter 10. Art and Perception Julian Hochberg	II. Measuring Aesthetic Value	133 146 150
I. Introduction II. The Physical Forms of Architecture III. Evaluative Responses: Human Perceptions That Follow Architectural Form IV. The Architectural Design Process: Human Perceptions That Precede Architectural Forms V. Conclusions References Chapter 9. The Psychology of Music Diana Deutsch I. Introduction II. Recognition of Tonal Shape III. The Formation of Perceptual Configurations IV. Rhythm and Tempo V. Memory VI. Timbre Perception VII. Musical Preferences VIII. Neurological Substrates References Chapter 10. Art and Perception Julian Hochberg
 I. Introduction II. The Physical Forms of Architecture III. Evaluative Responses: Human Perceptions That Follow Architectural Form IV. The Architectural Design Process: Human Perceptions That Precede Architectural Forms V. Conclusions References Chapter 9. The Psychology of Music Diana Deutsch I. Introduction II. Recognition of Tonal Shape III. The Formation of Perceptual Configurations IV. Rhythm and Tempo V. Memory VI. Timbre Perception VII. Musical Preferences VIII. Neurological Substrates References Chapter 10. Art and Perception Julian Hochberg 	Chapter 8. Perceptual Aspects of Architecture
II. The Physical Forms of Architecture III. Evaluative Responses: Human Perceptions That Follow Architectural Form IV. The Architectural Design Process: Human Perceptions That Precede Architectural Forms V. Conclusions References Chapter 9. The Psychology of Music Diana Deutsch I. Introduction II. Recognition of Tonal Shape III. The Formation of Perceptual Configurations IV. Rhythm and Tempo V. Memory VI. Timbre Perception VII. Musical Preferences VIII. Neurological Substrates References Chapter 10. Art and Perception Julian Hochberg	Kristina Hooper
I. Introduction II. Recognition of Tonal Shape III. The Formation of Perceptual Configurations IV. Rhythm and Tempo V. Memory VI. Timbre Perception VII. Musical Preferences VIII. Neurological Substrates References Chapter 10. Art and Perception Julian Hochberg	 II. The Physical Forms of Architecture III. Evaluative Responses: Human Perceptions That Follow Architectural Form IV. The Architectural Design Process: Human Perceptions That Precede Architectural Forms V. Conclusions 	155 158 168 178 186 187
I. Introduction II. Recognition of Tonal Shape III. The Formation of Perceptual Configurations IV. Rhythm and Tempo V. Memory VI. Timbre Perception VII. Musical Preferences VIII. Neurological Substrates References Chapter 10. Art and Perception Julian Hochberg	Chapter 9. The Psychology of Music
II. Recognition of Tonal Shape III. The Formation of Perceptual Configurations IV. Rhythm and Tempo V. Memory VI. Timbre Perception VII. Musical Preferences VIII. Neurological Substrates References Chapter 10. Art and Perception Julian Hochberg	Diana Deutsch
Julian Hochberg	 II. Recognition of Tonal Shape III. The Formation of Perceptual Configurations IV. Rhythm and Tempo V. Memory VI. Timbre Perception VII. Musical Preferences VIII. Neurological Substrates 	191 192 201 204 208 211 214 215 218
Julian Hochberg	Chapter 10. Art and Perception
I. Introduction	•
 II. Representation and Communication about the World III. Nonrepresentational Functions of Artistic Presentations: Expressive and Aesthetic References 	 II. Representation and Communication about the World III. Nonrepresentational Functions of Artistic Presentations: Expressive and Aesthetic 	225 229 242 251

viii CONTENTS

Chapter 11. The Perception of Motion Pictures
Julian Hochberg and Virginia Brooks
 I. Introduction II. The Moving Camera and the Representation of Space III. Discontinuous Cuts and Their Contribution to Mental Structure 	259 273
and Visual Momentum IV. Summary and Conclusions References	280 295 298
PART V. ODOR AND TASTE
Chapter 12. Odors in the Environment: Hedonics, Perfumery, and Odor Abatement
Howard R. Moskowitz
 I. Introduction II. Odor Hedonics III. Perfumery IV. Evaluation and Control of Malodors V. Odor Counteraction VI. An Overview References 	307 308 318 326 336 344 345
Chapter 13. Food and Food Technology: Food Habits, Gastronomy, Flavors, and Sensory Evaluation
Howard R. Moskowitz
 I. Introduction II. Food Acceptance and Food Rejection III. Food Quality and Gastronomy IV. Flavors, Flavor Development, and Food Chemistry V. Applied Taste Testing of Foods VI. An Overview References 	349 350 365 370 375 380
PART VI. PARAPSYCHOLOGY
Chapter 14. Parapsychology
Edward Girden
I. Introduction II. The Modern Period III. Examination of Outstanding Studies IV. The Moral of Fraud	385 388 394 398

V. Recent Research Trends

402

CONTENTS
VI. Theoretical Basis of the Psychical Controversy VII. The Future References	404 408 409
Author Index	413
SUBJECT INDEX	427