

Contents

Preface	page vii
List of contributors	ix
Part I Mathematical psychology	1
1 George A. Miller and the origins of mathematical psychology William J. McGill	3
2 The contribution of information theory to psychology Wendell R. Garner	19
3 Writing Plans . . . Eugene Galanter	36
4 George Miller's data and the development of methods for representing cognitive structures Roger N. Shepard	45
5 The magical number seven: information processing then and now George Sperling	71
6 Cognitive recollections Ulric Neisser	81
Part II The Center for Cognitive Studies	89
7 Founding the Center for Cognitive Studies Jerome Bruner	90
8 Life at the Center Donald A. Norman and Willem J. M. Levelt	100
Part III Psycholinguistics	111
9 The psychological reality of grammar: a student's-eye view of cognitive science Thomas G. Bever	112
10 Psychology and linguistics in the sixties Eric Wanner	143
11 Language use and linguistic diversity Jacques Mehler	153
12 The immanent form of phonemes Morris Halle	167

Part IV	Studying the lexicon	185
13	On opening the dictionary Philip Johnson-Laird	186
14	Lexical development – the Rockefeller years Susan Carey	197
15	Methodical semanticism considered as a history of progress in cognitive science Keith Stenning	210
Part V	Cognitive neuroscience	229
16	Life with George: the birth of the Cognitive Neuroscience Institute Michael S. Gazzaniga	230
17	Cognitive psychologists become interested in neuroscience William Hirst	242
Part VI	Cognitive science	257
18	Cognitive science? Gilbert Harman	258
	Biographical information	269
	Publications	271
	Name index	279
	Subject index	282