

CONTENTS

List of Contributors	v
Preface	vii

Scientific and Philosophical Psychology: A Historical Introduction

THEODORE MISCHEL

I. Introduction	1
II. The Impact of the Scientific Revolution	5
III. The Empiricist "Science of Man"	11
IV. The Kantian Approach	16
V. The Experimental Study of the Mind	20
VI. Watson, Behaviorism, and the Aftermath	26
VII. Reassessments	34
References	37

A Phenomenology of the Other One: Corrigible, Hypothetical, and Critical

DONALD T. CAMPBELL

I. Introduction	41
II. Anchorless Knowledge	42
III. Claims for the Incorrigeability of Phenomena	45
IV. The Behaviorist Claims to Epistemic Priority	48
V. Phenomenal Absolutism	52
VI. Unifying Phenomenology and Behaviorism	54
VII. A Behavioral-Phenomenal Analysis of Aristotle's Lover and Coward	59
VIII. Summary	66
References	66

Concepts and the Explanation of Human Behavior

STEPHEN TOULMIN

I. Introduction	71
II. Concepts and Behavior	72
III. Explanations of Human Action	85
IV. Conclusion	101
References	104

Change of Activity: A New Focus for the Theory of Motivation

JOHN W. ATKINSON

I. Introduction	105
II. The Primitive Observation: A Change of Activity	107
III. Determinants of a Change of Activity	108
IV. The Behavioral Measures of Tendency and Force	116
V. Displacement and Substitution	117
VI. Some General Implications of the Conceptual Scheme	118
VII. The Relationship between Overt and Covert Expressions of a Tendency	123
VIII. Description of Individual Differences in Personality in the Context of a Theory of Motivation	126
References	132

Motivation, Emotion, and the Conceptual Schemes of Common Sense

R. S. PETERS

I. Introduction	135
II. Psychology, Common Sense, and the Institutional Framework	136
III. Motives, Traits, and Attitudes	141
IV. Theories of Motivation and the Abstract Postulates of Common Sense	144
V. Commonsense Clues to Phenomena Requiring Special Explanation	150
VI. Common Sense and Psychological Theories of Emotion	153
VII. Emotions, Wishes, and Passive Phenomena	159
VIII. Conclusion	162
References	163

Human Emotion and Action

MAGDA B. ARNOLD

I. Introduction	167
II. Phenomenological Analysis	168
III. Appetitive Tendencies and Action	178
IV. The Human Use of Human Functions	185
V. Conclusion	195
References	196

The Conceptual Dimensions of Emotions

ABRAHAM I. MELDEN

I. Introduction	199
II. The Emotion of Anger	200
III. The Concomitants of Anger	204
IV. Conceptual Reconstruction of the Emotion Anger	210

V. The Situational Dimensions of Emotion	213
VI. Conclusion	220
References	221

Complex Behavior in Natural Settings

PETER MADISON

I. Introduction	223
II. The Influence of the Past	225
III. Reintegration and Objectification in Perception	236
IV. Reintegration and other Modalities of Psychological Functioning	239
V. A Field Theory View and the Reintegrative Dimension	249
VI. Freud's Theory of the Influence of Past Experience	250
VII. Personality and Common Sense	253
References	258

Epilogue

THEODORE MISCHEL

I. Introduction	261
II. Psychological Concepts	261
III. Common Sense, Psychological Theory, and Rule-Following Behavior	267
IV. Language, Thought, and Action	274

Author Index	279
Subject Index	282