

Contents

INTRODUCTION	9
CHAPTER ONE
PHILOSOPHICAL FOUNDATIONS	11
Purpose	11
1. Phenomenological viewpoint	12
2. The subject/object nature of the self	12
3. The totality person-world	13
4. Integrating individual and social data	13
5. The dialectic view	13
The presentation of the subject matter	14
Theoretical foundations	16
One-world view	17
Dialectics	21
Existential philosophy	24
Phenomenology	25
Psychological theory	26
CHAPTER TWO
TRANSITION FROM THE ORGANISMIC TO THE
SYMBOLIC SELF: ORGANISMIC SELF-CREATION	27
Organismic states in early infancy	28
Piaget	31
Schachtel	32
Duval & Wicklund	35
Summary	38
One-world view	40
Creation of the self by the self	40
Negation	41
Action	43
Self/action	45
Freud	48
Mead	49
CHAPTER THREE
TRANSITION FROM THE ORGANISMIC TO THE
SYMBOLIC SELF: THE SYMBOLIC SELF	53
Other “contents” of the concept of self	53

Meaning	54
Meaning and alienation	55
Funding	55
Anxiety	57
Self-esteem	60
The present stage of the concept of self	62
The changing self	73
Motivation and the dialectic self	74
Summary	76
CHAPTER FOUR
THE SELF AS SUBJECT AND OBJECT	78
The self-reflective man	78
The symbiotic state	80
Nondialectic vs. dialectic interaction	87
Stierlin's dialectics	91
The present content of the self	96
The "I" and the "me"	99
The dialectic self	100
The unconscious	104
A Freudian viewpoint	105
Essence/existence	105
Alienation	106
The dialectic self view	106
The depleted "I"	107
The one-world view	108
Part process	113
Communication	115
Part process and conscious/unconscious	117
Internal part process	121
The inner-outer problem once more	124
CHAPTER FIVE
THE END – AND THE BEGINNING	126
The end	126
The beginning	128
Implications for disturbances of the self	128
Implications for psychotherapy	130
Part process as a therapeutic tool	134
Implications for research methods on interaction	137
EPILOGUE	145
BIBLIOGRAPHY	181