

Contents

1 Introduction	9
1.1 Preliminaries about the aim and method of research	9
1.2 The appearance of Slavs in historiography	12
1.3 Genetic facts and their interpretation	19
2 Centum elements in the Slavic satəm landscape	21
2.1 Introduction	21
2.2 Reconstructing prehistoric language contacts	21
2.3 Centum elements in Slavic	24
2.4 In search of a solution: the data and the research method	33
3 Lexical evidence preserved in hydronymy and culture-specific words	45
3.1 Hydronymy of presumably non-Slavic origin	45
3.2 Hydronymy of presumably Slavic origin	50
3.3 Language and culture in reconstruction	52
4 Archaeological evidence for early Indo-European migrations and the later Great Migrations from the east	55
4.1 The first Kurgan wave	58
4.2 The second Kurgan wave	59
4.3 The third Kurgan wave	61
4.4 The Bronze Age	63
4.5 The beginning of the first millennium AD	70
5 Phonological changes in Slavic associated with the Great Migrations of the middle of the first millennium AD	79
5.1 Early Migrational Slavic	81
5.2 Late Migrational Slavic	85
5.3 Post-Migrational Slavic	88
5.4 Disintegrating Slavic	91
6 Lenition in Slavic and its origin	95
7 Slavic prosodic history and the dissolution of the Slavic unity	105

7.1 Preliminaries about Slavic prosody	105
7.2 Prehistoric and early historical prosodic changes in Slavic	108
7.3 A treatment of Slavic prosody based on the syllable	120
7.4 Prosodic parallels in other language groups	126
7.5 The prosodic shape of Slovene	131
8 Remarks on Celtic phonological history	141
8.1 The dialectal division of Celtic in the first millennium AD	141
8.2 Old Irish phonological changes	142
8.3 The Brythonic developments	148
8.4 The historical origin of Vannetais of Armorica	157
9 Who were the historical Veneti?	163
9.1 Historical evidence on Venetic settlements	163
9.2 The Venetic language	164
9.3 The typological profile of Venetic in relation to the type-modifying processes in Slavic during the Great Migrations	177
10 The Vannetais dialect of Breton	181
11 Evidence from a Gaulish sanative formula	187
12 The Gaulish calendar and Slavic and Baltic months' names	193
12.1 The Gaulish calendar of Coligny	194
12.2 Slavic and Baltic calendar peculiarities	196
13 When and by whom were the Slavs converted in medieval central Europe	205
13.1 The historical evidence	205
13.2 The vexed origin of the Kiev Leaflets	213
13.3 The influence of the Gothic Bible on Old Church Slavic Bible translations	215
14 Language and social structure in history	221
14.1 Reversal of hierarchy	221
14.2 Conclusion	224
Abbreviations	229
Appendix 1: Accentual paradigms in a comparative Slavic perspective	231
Appendix 2: Brythonic and Breton sound changes	235

List of illustrations, maps and tables	237
Sources of illustrations and maps	238
References	239
Subject index	251
Language index	252