

Contents

Preface ix

- 1. Heart Rate: A Sensitive Tool for the Study of Emotional Development in the Infant, Joseph J. Campos 1
 - Why Heart Rate Responses Are Widely Used with Infants 1
 - Bidirectional Nature of the Heart Rate Response 4
 - Recent Studies of Heart Rate Responsiveness in Perceptual Settings 6
 - Validation of the Heart Rate Response Shift: Heart Rate and Stranger Distress 15
 - Other Research on Heart Rate and Emotion 22
 - The Relations of These Results to the Explanations of Directionality of Heart Rate Change 24
 - Directions for Future Research 24
 - References 26
 - Comments on "Heart Rate: A Sensitive Tool for the Study of Emotional Development in the Infant," Sandra Scarr-Salapatek 32
- 2. Infancy, Biology, and Culture, Daniel G. Freedman 35
 - Genotypic Variation and Human Cultural Differences 36
 - Is There a Biological Basis for Cultural Differences in Sex Roles? 42
 - References 53

Comments on "Infancy, Biology, and Culture,"

Joseph J. Campos 55

- 3. Genetic Determinants of Infant Development: An Overstated Case, Sandra Scarr-Salapatek 59
- Systems in Development 62
- Of Creods and Common Human Environments 64
- Canalization of Infant Mental Development 68
- References 77

Comments on "Genetic Determinants of Infant Development: An Overstated Case,"

Philip R. Zelazo 80

- 4. From Reflexive to Instrumental Behavior, Philip R. Zelazo 87
- Newborn Stepping Research 92
- Postural Interference: Observations of a Single Infant 96
- The Significance of Infancy 97
- Smiling: A Cognitively Based Reflexive Response 97
- Implications 100
- References 103

Comments on "From Reflexive to Instrumental Behavior," Daniel G. Freedman 105A Reply to Freedman, Philip R. Zelazo 107

- 5. Developmental Psychobiology Comes of Age: A Discussion, Lewis P. Lipsitt 109
- Reciprocating and Interdependent Response Processes in Neonatal Sucking 117
- Sucking and Respiratory Occlusion 121
- Angry Behavior in the Newborn, and the Ontogeny of Aggression 122
- The Newborn as a Hedonic Responder 124
- Relevance of Developmental Psychobiology to Crib Death 126
- References 126

6. Three Themes in Developmental Psychology, Jerome Kagan	129
The Relation between Biological Maturation and Psychological Experience	130
The Meaning of Stage	134
The Power of Context	135
References	137
 Author Index	 139
Topical Index	143