
Contents

1. The Lay Epistemic Framework: Its History and Scope	1
The Endogenous-Exogenous Partition and the Process–Contents Distinction	2
Logical Consistency and Inconsistency	3
Motivational Bases	4
Content Domains of Application: Attitude Formation and Change	4
Social Comparison and Minority Influence	5
The Issue of Accuracy	5
Applications to Cognitive Therapy	6
Scientific and Lay Modes of Knowledge Acquisition ..	6
2. Knowing All: A Theory of Lay Epistemics	9
The Psychological Properties of Knowledge	9
The LEGO Blocks and the Searchlight Metaphors	10
The “Searchlight” Metaphor	11
The Process of Knowledge Acquisition	13
Hypothesis Generation	13
The Process of Hypothesis Validation: Person as a Natural Logician	22
Encoding of Stimulus Information as Hypothesis Validation	23
Functions of Knowledge	30
Summary	32

3. Empirical Research in the Lay Epistemic Framework	35
Motivational Effects in Epistemic Behavior	35
The Context of Knowledge Formation	35
The Context of Knowledge Utilization	42
The Context of Social Behavior	45
The Logical Element in Epistemic Behaviors	48
Cognitive Balance Effects	48
Inconsistency Resolution via Informational Search ..	49
Hypothesis Testing	50
Content-Bound Research in the Lay Epistemic Framework	52
Self-Ascribed Epistemic Authority	53
Summary and Conclusions	55
4. Unique and Nonunique Aspects of Attributions	57
The Logical Aspect of Attribution	57
Kelley's ANOVA Model	58
Cognitive Capability Notions: Availability, Accessibility, and Saliency	66
Motivational Bases of Attributions	68
Epistemic Motivations Revisited: Needs for Nonspecific and Specific Closure and for the Avoidance of Closure	69
Implications of the Epistemic Reanalysis of Motivational Effects in Attribution	76
Concluding Comments: Unique and Nonunique Aspects of Attributions	78
Implications for Further Research	81
Summary	82
5. A Bridge to Consistency Theories	85
Deductive, Motivational, and Content-Related Elements of Epistemic Behavior	86
The Logical Aspect	86
Festinger's Dissonance Theory	87
Heider's Balance Theory	89
The Congruity Model	92

Rosenberg's Affective-Cognitive Consistency Theory	93
Abelson and Rosenberg's Psycho-Logic	93
Aronson's Disconfirmation of Expectancy Formulation	95
Irle's Revised Dissonance Theory	95
McGuire's Consistency Theory	95
Recapitulation	95
The Mode of Resolution Problem	95
The Deductive Element in Cognitive Consistency Theories: A Summing Up	99
The Content Aspect of Cognitive Consistency Theories	100
Content-Specific Definitions of Inconsistency	100
Mapping Out Attempts	101
The Motivational Aspect	102
Inconsistency as a Universal Drive	102
Inconsistency's Motivational Properties as Derived from Other Needs	103
Different Types of Inconsistency	103
When Inconsistency Leads to Affect: A Lay Epistemic Interpretation	104
Lay Epistemic Interpretation of the Consistency Models: A Recapitulation	105
Bridging the Consistency and Attribution Paradigms	106
Research Implications of the Present Work	107
Summary	109
6. Attitudes as Knowledge Structures	111
The Definition of an Attitude	111
The Derivation of Attitudes	113
Attentional Focus Factors in Attitude Research	120
Epistemic Motivations and Attitude Change	123
Unitary or Disjunctive Processes of Attitude Formation and Change	129
Central versus Peripheral Routes to Attitude Change: A Unified Perspective	131
An Epistemology of Actions and the Attitude-Behavior Relation	134
Summary and Conclusions	139

7. Further Domains of Application: Social Comparison Processes and Minority-Influence Phenomena	143
Social Comparison Processes	143
The Two Senses of Social Comparison	144
Social Comparison as the Content of a Question ...	146
Social Comparison as Use of Social Sources of Information	148
The Motive Base of Social Comparison Phenomena	154
Domain Differentiation of Social Comparison Phenomena: The Content–Process Distinction	155
Social Comparison Phenomena: The Epistemic Perspective	158
Proposed Reorientations	159
Minority Influence	161
Popular “Reputations” of Minorities and Majorities	161
Categories of Factors Affecting Judgment Formation and Change	162
Conformity versus Independence in Minority and Majority Contexts	165
Compliance versus Internalization in the Majority and Minority Paradigms	166
Conclusion	168
Summary	168
8. The Issue of Accuracy in Social Perception and Cognition	171
Themes in Recent Accuracy Research	172
Defining Accuracy in Social Perception and Cognition	172
Accuracy versus Accuracies	176
A Process-Based Analysis of Situational Accuracy ...	187
The Accuracy Framework	187
The Realist Paradigm	188
Phenomenal Accuracy	192
Summary and Conclusions	194

9. Knowing How to Cure: Implications for Cognitive Therapy	197
The Contents of Dysfunctional Beliefs:
The Frustrative Hypothesis	197
Modifying the Frustrative Hypothesis:
Assessment Shifts, Goal Shifts, and
Means Shifts	198
Applying Lay Epistemic Principles to the Practice of
Cognitive Therapy	200
Knowledge Structures and Their Validity	200
Epistemic Authority	201
Freezing and Unfreezing Mechanisms	205
Contents of Therapeutic Change	208
Lay Epistemics and Cognitive Therapies:
A Comparative Appraisal	209
The Dysfunctional Misconception (Distortion)
Hypothesis	210
Are Depressives Wiser?	213
Contents of Irrational Beliefs	216
Primacy of Personal Experience as the Mediator of
Cognitive Change	217
Implications of the Lay Epistemic Analysis for the
Practice of Cognitive Therapy	219
Summary	221
10. The Social Psychology of Science: On the Lay Epistemic
Underpinnings of Research Methodology	223
Introduction	223
Official and Unofficial Research Methodologies	224
Official Methodological Concepts	225
Beyond Official Methodologies: Science as a Social
Cognitive Enterprise	235
Summary	245
References	247
Author Index	269
Subject Index	275