

Contents

Preface	v
1. Introduction	1
2. Background	3
Workers from abroad in West Germany	3
A study of label effects	10
Critique and reply	13
Further related evidence	16
3. Theory and Methods	18
Six hypotheses	18
Procedure and measures	29
Excursion	50
4. Results	55
Correlations between trait-attributions and antipathy ratings	55
Hypothesis 1: Education and ethnic attitudes	55
Attribution dispositions of girls and boys	58
Patterns of attributions to Turks, Italians and Germans	62
Contact and attitudes	69
Social class and attitudes	71
A supplementary study: Cognitive and conative components of attitudes towards workers from abroad	74
Hypothesis 2: Education and imagery	87
Hypothesis 3: Imagery and ethnic attitudes	90
Hypothesis 4: Education and associative flexibility	98
Hypothesis 5: Associative flexibility and ethnic attitudes	103
Hypothesis 6: Imagery and associative flexibility	107
Synopsis	109
5. Competing and Complementary Explanations	117
“Associative Flexibility” or “Cognitive Complexity”?	117
Or intelligence?	124
Associative fluidity or disinhibition?	127

Widening the perspectives	128
Attitudinal or acquiescent responses in the low education group?	130
Attitudinal or socially desirable responses in the high education group?	139
Enlightenment mediated by higher education?	142
Attitudes engendered by differential contact experiences?	147
Hostility against outgroups a consequence of unfavourable socio-economic conditions?	149
Specific needs for national differentiation and identity within low education groups?	161
6. Conclusions	170
Summary of inferences	170
Possible future tasks	173
Attitudes and behavioural consequences	176
Pleas against misunderstandings	180
Notes	183
References	187
Subject Index	195