

Contents

Acknowledgements	ix
Foreword by Jerome S. Bruner	xi

1 The development of a perspective
1. Some personal issues	1
2. The social dimension	3

PART I

Social psychology and social processes

Introduction	13
2 Experiments in a vacuum
1. Introduction	17
2. Individual, inter-individual and social psychology	24
3. A perspective for a sociopsychological problem	30
3 Individuals and groups in social psychology
1. How 'social' is social psychology?	41
2. Individualistic and group theories	43

PART II

From perceptual judgement to social stereotypes

Introduction	57
4 The importance of exaggerating
1. Introduction	62
2. 'Relevant' dimensions the accentuation of differences	63
3. Social perception	69
4. An experimental illustration: value and the accentuation of judged differences	70
5. Values, classifications and stereotypes	75
6. Statement of predictions	78
7. Application of predictions to the various series	79
8. Abstract continua	88
5 Differences and similarities: some contexts of judgement
1. Introduction	90

Contents

2. Classification and judgements of length	91
3. Polarization of judgements in the perception of people	104
4. Accentuation of social similarities and differences: two examples in ethnic stereotypes	114
6 Cognitive aspects of prejudice
1. Introduction	127
2. Categorization	132
3. Assimilation	134
4. Search for coherence	136
5. Summary and conclusion	141
7 Social stereotypes and social groups
1. Introduction: stereotypes and social stereotypes	143
2. The four functions of social stereotypes	146
3. The cognitive functions of stereotypes	147
4. Social stereotypes and individual values	150
5. The 'ideologizing' of collective actions	154
6. Links between the collective and the individual	157
7. Concluding remarks	161

PART III

Insiders and outsiders

Introduction	165
8 The experience of prejudice
1. Introduction	168
2. Prior experience	169
3. Experience in Britain	174
4. The image of Britain	181
5. Changes in attitudes	183
9. The beginnings of ethnocentrism
1. The development of children's preference for their own country	187
2. The devaluation by children of their own national or ethnic group: two cases studies	197
10 Children's international perspectives
1. An exploratory study	207
2. Knowledge and preferences	210

Contents

PART IV

Intergroup conflict

Introduction	223
11 The attributes of intergroup behaviour
1. When does inter-individual behaviour become inter-group behaviour?	228
2. From social mobility to social movements	244
12 Social categorization, social identity and social comparison
1. Social categorization and social identity	254
2. Social identity and social comparison	256
3. Social comparison and relative deprivation	259
13 The achievement of group differentiation
1. The 'minimal' intergroup experiments and 'real' social contexts	268
2. Strategies of intergroup differentiation	276
14 Exit and voice in intergroup relations
1. Exit and voice, mobility and change	288
2. Individual exit, group exit and group chorus	298
3. Voice, status quo and social comparison in intergroup relations	305
15 The social psychology of minorities
1. What is a minority group?	309
2. The internal and external criteria of minority membership	312
3. From social stability to social change: the psychological effects of minority membership	316
References	344
Author index	363
General index	367