

Contents

Preface	ix
Acknowledgements	xiv
1 American Models of the Long Cycle
The gap in Schumpeter's system	I
One-sided interpretations	5
Limitations of America-centred models	8
Appendix A
A note on spectral analysis of long swings	17
2 Demographic Determinants of British and American Building Cycles, 1870-1913
Statistical sources and methods	23
Regional building cycles, 1870-1910	26
Demographic determinants: regional and national	34
The alternation of British and American cycles	39
Appendix B
Population change and regional building cycles in England and Wales, 1870-1910: sources and methods	45
3 The Role of International Capital Movements
The world investment picture in 1913	60
Statistical findings on inverse cycles	66
Capital movements and the terms of trade	67
The Edwardian climax	71
	vii

4	The Atlantic Economy: The Process of Interaction
	The monetary factor	77
	Outlines of an interaction model	79
	Testing the assumptions	81
	Long swings in Canada and Australia	88
	The interaction process: real and monetary factors	93
	Historical evidence	101
	Long swings in productivity and real income	120
	Conclusions	123
	The process in reverse: America and her periphery, 1946-71	129
	Appendix C
	Formal statement of the model	137
5	Negro Migration and the American Urban Dilemma
	The pattern of Negro migration, 1870-1950	141
	Fertility and mortality	148
	The impact on the cities	154
	Assimilation or polarization?	160
6	Migration and Regional Growth in Britain
	Wales and the Atlantic economy	170
	A cultural effect of urbanization	179
	The southward shift of population, 1911-66	181
	Regional growth of manufacturing	185
	The new immigration	191
7	The Dynamics of Brain Drain
	The statistical groundwork	199
	The pattern of international flows	201
	Canada: an intermediate country	203
	Immigrants to America from developing countries	205
	Immigration in relation to U.S. output of educated manpower	210
	Britain's net balance	212
	Dynamic shortage and brain drain	218
	Conclusion	230
	Epilogue on the Kuznets cycle	234
	Bibliography	237
	Index	253