Contents

List of figures xi
Preface xii
Orthography and reference style xvii
Abbreviations xviii

Introduction 1
Lessons from Chinese studies of leisure 3
The organization of the book 16

1 Locating leisure in a medium-sized Chinese city 19
Quanzhou city past and present 21
Gate openers and key informants in the field 27
Strategies for identifying interviewees 29
Data from the field 30
Doing fieldwork in a foreign language 35

2 What is leisure – in China and beyond? 38
What is leisure? 38
Leisure in historical and socio-cultural contexts 44
Leisure in China 48

3 The utility of leisure and the dangers of idleness 54
The Protestant work ethic and popular culture critique 54
The characteristics of the PRC leisure ethic 57
The PRC leisure ethic in academic writing 59
Contents

4 Leisure in the Quanzhou cityscape 69
  Envisioning a leisure area 70
  The characteristics of a leisure place 73
  Changing practices in a changing cityscape 81

5 ‘Healthy’ leisure in transition 85
  The decline of the library and the rise of the book café 86
  The diminishing role of state-organized leisure 96

6 Bad people in bad places? 108
  ‘Luan’: keeping chaos at a distance 109
  Internet cafés as chaotic leisure spaces 115
  Karaoke rooms as segregated social spaces 126
  The importance of first-hand experience 133

7 Consumption as a form of leisure 136
  Changes and continuities in Chinese consumption 138
  Consumer policy and consumers’ agency 143
  Shopping as a meaningful leisure activity 148
  The cultured middle class’s attitude towards consumption 153

8 Contested leisure space 161
  Qingyuan Mountain 162
  Qingyuan Mountain as a place of leisure 163
  Leisure means livelihood at Qingyuan Mountain 167
  Qingyuan Mountain from the perspective of the management 168
  Confrontation at Qingyuan Mountain 173
  Quanzhou people’s ways of ‘making do’ 176

Conclusions 183

Glossary 189
Notes 196
Bibliography 203
Index 216