Contents

List of tables page x
Acknowledgements xi

Introduction: grammatical categories and the biolinguistic perspective 1

1 The structure and interpretation of (Romance) complementizers 13
1.1 Romance complementizers are nominal and head their own noun phrase 14
1.2 Structure of the complementizer phrase 19
1.2.1 Combining a left periphery in the complementizer phrase and in the embedded sentence; combining two complementizers 23
1.2.2 Some potential problems 30
1.3 The left periphery beyond complementizers 37
1.3.1 Is order dictated by interpretation – or interpretation by order? 38
1.3.2 Embedded contexts 43
1.4 Conclusions 47

2 Variation in Romance k-complementizer systems 49
2.1 Systems with two k-complementizers 49
2.1.1 Definite and indefinite complementizers – and alternative analyses 54
2.1.2 Generalized wh–complementizers 61
2.2 'If' 65
2.3 The interaction with (non-)finiteness 73

3 Sentential negation: adverbs 80
3.1 Sentential negation adverbs are nominal and argumental 83

	3.1.1 Further evidence	88
	3.1.2 Sentential negation adverbs as nominal arguments	92
3.2	Ordering sentential negation with respect to other adverbs	94
	3.2.1 The order of negation with respect to aspectual adverbs	106
	3.2.2 The order of negation with respect to quantificational and manner adverbs	111
	3.2.3 General discussion	118
3.3	The interaction of adverbial and verbal positions: the participle	120
4	Sentential negation: clitics	128
4.1	Interactions of negation clitics and subject clitics	131
4.2	Interactions of negation clitics with object clitics	138
	4.2.1 Non-negative n	145
4.3	Negative concord and negative doubling	152
5	The middle-passive voice: evidence from Albanian	159
5.1	Data	160
	5.1.1 Middle-passive morphologies	160
	5.1.2 The interpretation of the middle-passive morphologies	164
	5.1.3 The Arbëresh varieties	169
5.2	The u clitic	172
5.3	Specialized inflections	184
	5.3.1 Be–participle	188
6	The auxiliary: have/be alternations in the perfect	196
6.1	Evidence	196
	6.1.1 Theoretical background	203
6.2	Auxiliary selection independent of transitivity/voice	208
	6.2.1 Auxiliary selection according to person	209
6.3	Splits according to transitivity/voice	216
	6.3.1 Auxiliary selection according to voice	216
	6.3.2 Auxiliary selection according to transitivity	218
	6.3.3 Irreversibility	222
6.4	Finer parametrization	223
	6.4.1 Interactions between auxiliary selection according to transitivity/voice and according to person	224
	6.4.2 The third auxiliary	228
6.5	Some conclusions	233

7 The noun (phrase): agreement, case and definiteness in an Albanian variety 236
7.1 Theoretical and empirical background 237
7.1.1 Nominal inflections in Albanian 239
7.1.2 Generative approaches to case 244
7.2 Analysis of Albanian nominal inflections 246
7.2.1 Consonantal inflections 250
7.2.2 Vocalic case inflections and lack of inflections 255
7.2.3 Prepositional contexts 259
7.2.4 Summary 261
7.3 The Albanian noun phrase 262
7.3.1 The genitive 262
7.3.2 The adjective 266
7.3.3 Adjectives as heads of the noun phrase 272
7.4 Concluding remarks 275

8 (Definite) denotation and case in Romance: history and variation 276
8.1 The Latin case system 277
8.2 Romance case systems: Romanian 286
8.3 Other Romance case systems – and alternative accounts 295
8.4 Loss of case in Romance: Romansh –s 302
8.5 Pronouns – and some conclusions 308

Notes 312
References 331
Index 345