

Table of contents

List of country abbreviations	7
1 The importance of the occupation and labour status variables in social science research	9
1.1 Occupation as an indicator of social status	9
1.2 Occupation as an indicator of prestige	10
1.3 Labour status as an indicator of position in the life-cycle	11
1.4 Definition of employment	11
2 Variables to be measured in social science surveys	15
2.1 Labour status	15
2.2 Full-timers and substantial part-timers and their jobs	18
2.3 Persons who are neither full-timers nor substantial part-timers	18
3 The International Labour Organization's labour force concept	21
3.1 Description of the ILO labour force concept	21
3.2 Implementation of the labour force concept in national Labour Force Surveys in the EU member states	23
3.3 Implementation of the labour force concept in the censuses	27
3.4 Implementation of the labour force concept in Eurostat surveys	29
4 Measuring labour status in social science surveys	31
5 What must be taken into account when harmonising occupation and labour status?	35
5.1 The process of harmonisation: harmonisation is not translation	35
5.1.1 The procedure for the translation of attitude variables	35
5.1.2 Harmonisation of socio-demographic variables	36
5.2 Rules of harmonisation	38
6 What instruments are available?	41
6.1 Implementation of the ILO labour status concept in surveys	41
6.2 Classifying occupations with ISCO-88 and ISCO-08	43
6.3 Measuring job autonomy	46

6.4	Prestige and status scales	48
6.4.1	Treiman's Standard International Occupational Prestige Scale	48
6.4.2	Ganzeboom et al.'s International Socio-Economic Index of Occupational Status (ISEI)	49
6.4.3	Erikson, Goldthorpe und Portocarero's Class Categories (EGP)	49
7	What form should an instrument for comparative survey research take?	51
7.1	Optional and central elements of the survey instrument	51
7.2	Proposal for a survey instrument	53
7.3	Application of the instrument	64
	References	65
Annexes
Annex 1	Censuses of the EU-27, Norway, Switzerland, and USA	75
Annex 2	Labour Force Survey: 18 examples	123
Annex 3	Eurostat	189
	ECHP, European Community Household Panel	190
	EU-SILC, European Union Statistics on Income and Living Conditions	192
Annex 4	Academic Surveys: ESS, ISSP, EVS	211
Annex 5	Pilot Study: Questionnaire and Frequencies	267
	Acknowledgments	285
	The authors	285