

Contents

---

About the Editors and Contributors	ix
Acknowledgments	xi
Preface Stephen Kotkin	xiii
Maps	xvii
Introduction Bruce A. Elleman, Elisabeth Köll, and Y. Tak Matsusaka	3
Part I Competing Railway Imperialisms	11
1.      The Chinese Eastern Railway from the First Sino-Japanese War until the Russo-Japanese War S.C.M. Paine	13
2.      Japan's South Manchuria Railway Company in Northeast China, 1906–34 Y. Tak Matsusaka	37
3.      Sino-Soviet Tensions and Soviet Administrative Control over the Chinese Eastern Railway, 1917–25 Bruce A. Elleman	59
4.      Railway as Political Catalyst: The Chinese Eastern Railway and the 1929 Sino-Soviet Conflict Felix Patrikeeff	81
Part II Competing Railway Nationalisms	103
5.      Technology Transfer in Modern China: The Case of Railway Enterprises in Central China and Manchuria Chang Jui-te	105
6.      Chinese Railroads, Local Society, and Foreign Presence: The Tianjin-Pukou Line in pre-1949 Shandong Elisabeth Köll	123

7.	Railways in Communist Strategy and Operations in Manchuria, 1945–48 Harold M. Tanner	149
8.	Return of the Chinese Changchun Railway to China by the USSR Zhang Shengfa	171
	Epilogue: Rivers of Steel: Manchuria's Railways as a Natural Extension of the Sea Lines of Communication Bruce A. Elleman	195
	Selected Bibliography	209
	Index	223