

Contents

List of Abbreviations and Acronyms	ix
Preface	xi
ONE. The New Global Economic Order	3
Changes in the World Economy	5
Intellectual Perspectives	13
My Perspective: State-centric Realism	15
Purpose of Economic Activity	23
Conclusion	24
TWO. The Nature of Political Economy	25
What You Seek Is What You Find	31
The Nature of an Economy	38
Embeddedness of the Economy	41
Conclusion	45
THREE. The Neoclassical Conception of the Economy	46
The Discipline of Neoclassical Economics	46
Nature of a Market	54
Method of Comparative Statics	57
Intellectual Limitations	60
Economists and Public Policy	69
Comparison of Economics and Political Economy	74
Conclusion	76
FOUR. The Study of International Political Economy	77
Distribution of Wealth and Economic Activities	78
National Autonomy	80
The Politics of International Regimes	82
Theory of Hegemonic Stability	93
Governance of the Global Economy	97
Conclusion	102
FIVE. New Economic Theories	103
Change and Neoclassical Economics	104
World View of the New Theories	106

CONTENTS

The New Theories	108
Conclusion	127
SIX. The Political Significance of the New Economic Theories	129
National Governments and Domestic Economies	129
Oligopoly and Power in Economic Outcomes	132
Technological Innovation	135
Convergent and Divergent Economic Growth	141
Conclusion	147
SEVEN. National Systems of Political Economy	148
Differences among National Economies	149
The American System of Market-Oriented Capitalism	150
The Japanese System of Developmental Capitalism	156
The German System of "Social Market" Capitalism	168
Significance of National Differences	174
Is One System Superior to the Others?	175
Do Nations Compete with One Another?	180
Convergence, Harmonization, or Mutual Recognition?	183
Conclusion	195
EIGHT. The Trading System	196
The Debate over Free Trade	198
Trade and the Economy	202
Revisions of Conventional Trade Theory	206
Postwar Trade Regime	217
The Uruguay Round and World Trade Organization	221
New Threats to an Open Trading System	224
Conclusion	232
NINE. The International Monetary System	234
The Postwar International Monetary System	235
The End of Fixed Exchange Rates	238
The Financial Revolution and Monetary Affairs	239
Embedded Technical and Political Issues	242
Devising an International Monetary System	248
Reform of International Monetary Affairs	250
Unity or Fragmentation of the Monetary System?	255
Few or Many National Currencies?	258
Conclusion	259
TEN. The International Financial System	261
Partial Globalization of International Finance	261
Nature of Financial Crises	264
The East Asian Financial Crisis	267

Controversy over Regulation of International Finance	271
Conclusion	277
ELEVEN. The State and the Multinationals	278
Explanations of FDI and the MNC	279
The Multinationals and the International Economy	289
Increased Regionalization of Services and Manufacturing	292
Debate over the MNC and the Nation-State	294
An International Regime for FDI and MNCs	300
Do Global Corporations Pose a Threat?	302
Conclusion	304
TWELVE. The State and Economic Development	305
The Rise and Demise of Development Economics	306
Triumph of Neoliberalism	309
The Debt Crisis and Structural Adjustment	313
Theory of the "Developmental State"	316
The East Asian Miracle Project	321
The East Asian Financial/Economic Crisis	329
The Future of the Developmental State	331
The Transitional Economies	333
Conclusion	339
THIRTEEN. The Political Economy of Regional Integration	341
Economic Theories	344
Political Theories	348
An Eclectic Approach	358
Conclusion	361
FOURTEEN. The Nation-State in the Global Economy	362
The Limited Nature of Economic Globalization	364
Alleged Consequences of Economic Globalization	366
Effectiveness of Macroeconomic Policy	369
The Need for a Historical Perspective	375
Conclusion	376
FIFTEEN. Governing the Global Economy	377
Neoliberal Institutionalism	379
The New Medievalism	390
Transgovernmentalism	398
Governance for What?	400
Conclusion	402
Select Bibliography	403
Index	411