

Contents

|                |           |
|----------------|-----------|
| Editors | xi |
|----------------|-----------|

|                             |             |
|-----------------------------|-------------|
| List of Contributors | xiii |
|-----------------------------|-------------|

|                                                         |          |
|---------------------------------------------------------|----------|
| Marine Environment and Human Health: An Overview | 1 |
| J. Icarus Allen                                  |          |

|     |                                        |    |
|-----|----------------------------------------|----|
| 1   | Introduction                           | 1  |
| 2   | Conceptual Framework                   | 5  |
| 3   | Issues addressed in this Book          | 10 |
| 3.1 | Pathogens                              | 10 |
| 3.2 | Pollutants                             | 11 |
| 3.3 | Harmful Algal Blooms (HABs)            | 12 |
| 3.4 | Public Health and Wellbeing            | 14 |
| 3.5 | Scientific Challenges and Policy Needs | 15 |
| 4   | Towards a Systems Approach             | 16 |
|     | References                             | 21 |

|                                                                                                      |           |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------|
| Waterborne Pathogens                                                                          | 25 |
| Jill R. Stewart, Lora E. Fleming, Jay M. Fleisher,Amir M. Abdelzaher and M. Maille Lyons |           |

|     |                                                         |    |
|-----|---------------------------------------------------------|----|
| 1   | Introduction                                            | 25 |
| 2   | Human Pathogens in the Marine Environment               | 27 |
| 2.1 | Pathogens Introduced to the Oceans                      | 27 |
| 2.2 | Pathogens Indigenous to the Oceans                      | 30 |
| 2.3 | Differentiating Pathogenic from Non-Pathogenic Microbes | 30 |
| 2.4 | Pathogen Distribution                                   | 31 |
| 2.5 | Pathogen Detection                                      | 32 |

|     |                                                                     |    |
|-----|---------------------------------------------------------------------|----|
| 3   | Fecal Indicator Bacteria                                            | 32 |
| 3.1 | Development and Usage                                               | 33 |
| 3.2 | Limitations                                                         | 35 |
| 4   | Alternative Measures of Microbial Quality                           | 38 |
| 4.1 | The Ideal Indicator                                                 | 38 |
| 4.2 | Alternative Indicators                                              | 39 |
| 4.3 | Microbial Source Tracking                                           | 40 |
| 5   | Molecular Methods: A Revolution in Detection Technologies           | 42 |
| 6   | Epidemiological Studies: Linking Microbial Measures to Human Health | 44 |
| 7   | Modeling Pathogens in Marine Waters                                 | 53 |
| 7.1 | Modeling Aquatic Pathogens: The Example of Vibrios                  | 53 |
| 7.2 | Coupling Modeling and Remote Sensing                                | 55 |
| 7.3 | Use of Models in Management: Fecal Indicator Bacteria               | 56 |
| 8   | The Future of Beach Regulation                                      | 56 |
|     | References                                                          | 58 |

Estuarine and Marine Pollutants

68

James W. Readman, Eniko Kadar, John A. J. Readman and Carlos Guitart

|     |                                        |    |
|-----|----------------------------------------|----|
| 1   | Context                                | 68 |
| 2   | Public Perception                      | 70 |
| 3   | Priority Substances and Legislation    | 71 |
| 4   | Emerging Contaminants                  | 74 |
| 4.1 | Industrial Emerging Contaminants       | 75 |
| 4.2 | Other Emerging Contaminants            | 78 |
| 5   | Nanoparticles                          | 80 |
| 5.1 | Sources and Environmental Behaviour    | 80 |
| 6   | Plastics                               | 84 |
| 7   | Complex Mixtures: Causality of Effects | 85 |
| 8   | Climate Change and Pollutants          | 86 |
| 9   | Future Issues                          | 88 |
|     | References                             | 89 |

Harmful Algal Blooms

95

Keith Davidson, Paul Tett and Richard Gowen

|     |                                    |    |
|-----|------------------------------------|----|
| 1   | Phytoplankton                      | 95 |
| 1.1 | Harmful Phytoplankton              | 98 |
| 1.2 | Mechanisms of Harm to Human Health | 99 |
| 1.3 | The Scale of the Problem           | 99 |
| 2   | Human Health Syndromes             | 99 |
| 2.1 | Shellfish Poisoning                | 99 |

|       |                                                                  |     |
|-------|------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 2.2   | Causative Organisms and Toxins                                   | 100 |
| 2.2.1 | Paralytic Shellfish Poisoning (PSP)                              | 100 |
| 2.2.2 | Amnesic Shellfish Poisoning (ASP)                                | 101 |
| 2.2.3 | Diarrhetic Shellfish Poisoning (DSP)                             | 102 |
| 2.2.4 | Other Lipophilic Shellfish Toxins (LSTs)                         | 103 |
| 2.2.5 | Neurotoxic Shellfish Poisoning (NSP)                             | 104 |
| 2.3   | Respiratory Illness                                              | 105 |
| 2.4   | Fish Vectored Illness                                            | 105 |
| 2.5   | Cyanobacteria                                                    | 106 |
| 2.6   | The Role of Harmful Phytoplankton in Influencing Human Wellbeing | 106 |
| 2.6.1 | Microflagellates                                                 | 107 |
| 2.6.2 | Other Dinoflagellates                                            | 107 |
| 2.6.3 | Diatoms                                                          | 108 |
| 3     | Harmful Algal Blooms in UK Coastal Waters                        | 108 |
| 3.1   | Shellfish Poisoning                                              | 108 |
| 3.1.1 | Paralytic Shellfish Poisoning (PSP)                              | 109 |
| 3.1.2 | Amnesic Shellfish Poisoning (ASP)                                | 110 |
| 3.1.3 | Diarrhetic Shellfish Poisoning (DSP)                             | 111 |
| 3.1.4 | Azaspiracid Poisoning (AZP)                                      | 111 |
| 3.2   | Other Harmful Phytoplankton in UK Waters                         | 111 |
| 3.2.1 | Karenia mikimotoi                                         | 111 |
| 3.2.2 | Other Dinoflagellates                                            | 112 |
| 3.2.3 | Phaeocystis                                                      | 112 |
| 3.2.4 | Microflagellates                                                 | 112 |
| 3.2.5 | Diatoms and Silicoflagellates                                    | 113 |
| 3.2.6 | Other Species of Pelagic Microplankton                           | 113 |
| 4     | Safeguarding Health                                              | 113 |
| 4.1   | Monitoring                                                       | 113 |
| 4.2   | Are Algal Toxins a Public Health Problem?                        | 116 |
| 4.3   | Early Warning Methodologies and Mitigation                       | 117 |
| 4.4   | Introductions and Transfers of New Species                       | 119 |
| 4.5   | Climate Change                                                   | 120 |
|       | Acknowledgements                                                 | 121 |
|       | References                                                       | 121 |

Scientific Challenges and Policy Needs 128

Michael N. Moore, Richard Owen and Michael H. Depledge

|     |                                                                  |     |
|-----|------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 1   | Introduction                                                     | 129 |
| 2   | Key Science Challenges for Marine Environment and Human Health   | 135 |
| 2.1 | Linking Ecosystem Integrity, Ecosystem Services and Human Health | 135 |

|      |                                                                                                                                                                                         |            |
|------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------|
| 2.2  | Sustainable Industrial Development                                                                                                                                                      | 136        |
| 2.3  | Understanding and Mitigating the Impacts of Climate Change                                                                                                                              | 137        |
| 2.4  | Better Prediction Systems for Natural Disasters                                                                                                                                         | 137        |
| 2.5  | Understanding the Distribution and Risks of Marine Biogenic Toxins (Algal Toxins)                                                                                                       | 138        |
| 2.6  | Identifying and Reducing Viral and Bacterial Pathogens from Sewage and Agricultural Run-Off                                                                                             | 139        |
| 2.7  | Understanding Emerging Risks (e.g. Nanoparticulates from Industrial and Domestic Use)                                                                                                   | 139        |
| 2.8  | Conventional Chemical Inputs (Industrial, Domestic, Agricultural and Road Run-Off), including Personal Care Products, Disinfectants, Pharmaceuticals, Novel Chemicals and Radionuclides | 141        |
| 2.9  | Endocrine Disruption                                                                                                                                                                    | 143        |
| 2.10 | Pharmaceuticals from the Sea                                                                                                                                                            | 144        |
| 2.11 | The Marine Environment as a Health and Wellbeing Resource: the 'Blue Gym' Effect                                                                                                        | 144        |
| 3    | Public Health Needs                                                                                                                                                                     | 144        |
| 3.1  | Health-Related Indices of Environmental Impact                                                                                                                                          | 144        |
| 3.2  | Seafood Safety                                                                                                                                                                          | 145        |
| 3.3  | Environmental, Social and Economic Interactions (Quality of Governance, Overpopulation and Sustaining Critical Coastal Ecosystems)                                                      | 145        |
| 3.4  | Modelling – Need for an Integrated Approach in the Development of Effective Environmental and Public Health Policies on a Regional and Global Scale                                     | 146        |
| 4    | Policy Needs                                                                                                                                                                            | 146        |
| 5    | Discussion                                                                                                                                                                              | 150        |
| 6    | Conclusions and Recommendations                                                                                                                                                         | 152        |
|      | References                                                                                                                                                                              | 158        |
|      | Subject Index                                                                                                                                                                    | 164 |