

Contents

Acknowledgments	9
Introduction	11
1. Transforming Theoretical Perspectives: Radical Literature, Revolutionary Discourse, and the Transition from Political to Social Revolution	27
1.1 Challenging Boundaries: Literature, the Nonfictional Discourse, and the Social Material	27
1.1.1 'Literature' and its Critics: Constructs of Bourgeois Idealist Ideology	27
1.1.2 Culture as Text? The Pitfalls of 'Cultural Immaterialism'	30
1.2 Base and Superstructure Revisited	39
1.2.1 The Dialectics of Marx's Base-Superstructure Analogy	39
1.2.2 Excavating the Social Material? The Role of Ideological Forms in Marx's 'Science' of History and Revolution	46
1.2.3 Social Discourse – Social Consciousness – Social Change? Revolutionary Discourse as an Ideological Form	53
1.2.4 Literature as Part of the 'Social Totality'	58
1.3 From 'Political' to 'Social Revolution': The Major Paradigm Shift in the Radical Discourse	62
1.3.1 The Socio-Revolutionary Turn: Political, Social Revolution and Social Reform	62
1.3.2 The Dialectics of Political and Social Revolution	70
1.3.3 Marx's Attack on Ruge: The Aporia of an Idealist Conception of Social Revolution	76

1.3.4	“Die Waffe der Kritik” against “die Kritik der Waffen”: The Dialectics of Socio-Revolutionary Theory and Practice	78
1.3.5	“Eine Protestation des Menschen gegen das entmenschte Leben”: Marx’s Conception of Proletarian Social Revolution as a Struggle against Alienation	82
1.3.6	Proletarian Social Revolution: A Spectre of Anarchy or Vision of Universal Emancipation?	88
2.	Charting the Limits of Political Revolution: The Peterloo Massacre (1819), Shelley and British Radical Discourse	91
2.1	Political, Social, and Moral Revolution: The Stakes in Shelley’s Dilemma	91
2.2	Social Revolution at the Crossroads of Republicanism and Socialism	101
2.2.1	Shelley’s Revolutionary Paradoxes	101
2.2.2	Tom Paine’s Rights of Man (1791/92): A Foundational Text for Political Revolution	102
2.2.3.	The Aporias of Political Revolution in Shelley’s 1819/20s Texts	105
2.3	The Ethics of Proletarian Resistance: Moral or Physical Force?	115
2.3.1	Passive or Violent Resistance to Social Exploitation? Richard Carlile and Shelley	115
2.3.2	“[T]heir yokes they’d break”: Blandford’s Call for Forceful Social Revolution in “A Real Dream: Or, Another Hint for Mr. Bull!!” (1819) and The Mask of Anarchy	125
2.4	“Song to the Men of England” vs. The Mask of Anarchy : The Limits of Moral Revolution and the Collapse of the ‘Moral Economy’	129
2.5	“We Have Eaten From the Tree of Knowledge”: Emerging Proletarian Consciousness and the Bourgeois Didactics of Revolution	143

3.	The Social Turn in Revolutionary Ideology during the 1830s and early 1840s: Heine, Börne, Beddoes, and Büchner	149
3.1	The Socio-Historical Background and Revolutionary Ideology in 1830s Europe	149
3.2	A Social Revolution Without the Proletariat? The Myth of Heine as a Socio-Revolutionary Author	156
3.2.1	A Programme of Proletarian Social Revolution? Heine's Manifesto of Sensual Liberation in Zur Geschichte der Religion und Philosophie in Deutschland (1835) and its Early Socialist Critics	156
3.2.2	Prophesying the Social Revolution: Heine as a Precursor to Marx?	179
3.2.3	“Wie wilde Tiere [...] fiel das Volk über sie herüber”: Images of Proletarian Savagery	188
3.2.4	Heine's Ludwig Börne: Eine Denkschrift (1840): A Polemic against Proletarian Social Revolution	203
3.2.5	“Ein Fluch dem König, dem König der Reichen”: Heine's “Die Armen Weber” (1844) as a Call for Proletarian Social Revolution?	208
3.3	“Der Krieg der Armen gegen die Reichen”: Börne's Shifting Perspective on Proletarian Social Revolution	233
3.4	“With upright Toasting Fork and Toothless Cat”: The Impending Proletarian Revolt Against the Effete Bourgeoisie in Beddoes and Büchner	252
4.	The Drama of Class Struggle and Social Revolution: Marx, Georg Weerth and the Evolution of a Socialist Poetics of Revolution	264
4.1	Proletarian Tragedy and Social Consciousness	264
4.1.1	Tragic and Anti-tragic Proletarian Social Consciousness	264

4.1.2	Engels, Weerth and Heß: Or the Condition and Consciousness of the English and German Working Class	272
4.1.3	“Und wußte nicht warum”: The Tragic Lack of Social Consciousness in Weerth’s “Es war ein armer Schneider” (1845)	280
4.1.4	Anagnorisis, Catharsis, Peripeteia in the Proletarian Revolutionary Drama	287
4.1.5	“Glück auf, Silesia”: International Proletarian Solidarity and Social Consciousness	301
4.2	The Revolutionary Drama between Tragedy and Farce: Marx’s and Weerth’s Poetics of the Revolutions of 1848/49	307
4.2.1	Marx’s Shifting Poetics of Revolution from 1848 to 1852	307
4.2.2	The Farce of Chartism According to Weerth: The Betrayal of Britain’s Socio-Revolutionary Proletariat in 1848	322
4.2.3	Marx, Weerth, and the Farce of the German Bourgeoisie in 1848	329
4.2.4	Towards a New Poetics of Social Revolution: 1848/49 as Tragedy and Anti-Tragedy	342
Conclusion		357
Bibliography		361