

Contents

Introduction	1
I The Power of Fiction	27
1 Gender and the Art of Fiction	29
1.1 The Mind-Altering Possibilities of Art	30
1.2 The Riskiness of Art	33
1.2.1 The Politics of Writing	42
1.3 Tradition and Re-Writing	45
1.3.1 Genre as Form and Subject Matter	49
1.3.2 Feminist Writing	52
1.3.3 Lesbian Literature	55
1.4 Winterson’s Investment in Language	58
1.5 The Power of Narration: Identity, Reality, and the Body . .	60
1.5.1 Narrating Identity	61
1.5.2 Narrating Realities of Time and Space	66
1.5.3 Narrating the Body	72
2 Struggling with Race	77
2.1 Race as an Open Question	78
2.1.1 Race as an Empowering Cultural Concept	80
2.1.2 “Racelessness” as an Ultra-Conservative Strategy	83
2.1.3 Race as a Discriminatory Construct	86
2.2 “Signing Race While Designing Racelessness”: The Essay “Home”	89
2.2.1 The antagonism of “House” vs. “Home”	92
2.2.2 “Unmattering Race”	105
2.2.2.1 Unthinking Race – Un-racing Language	106
2.2.2.2 Unthinking Race – Un-racing the Plot	110
2.2.3 Re-Imagining Racelessness	113
II Questioning the Notion of Race	117
3 Challenging the Matrix of Racial Difference: Toni Morris- son’s Short Story “Recitatif”	119

3.1	Temptations of Assigning Race	121
3.2	The Scope of “Recitatif”	124
3.2.1	The Trauma of Parental Neglect – St. Bonaventure	125
3.2.2	The Reluctance to Remember – At Howard Johnson’s	129
3.2.3	The Issue of Unreliable Memories – At the Food Emporium	132
3.2.4	Racial Strife vs. Ideals of Motherhood – The Busing Protests	134
3.2.5	Scapegoating Maggie – The Orchard Incident	141
3.3	Identity and the Un-/Realities of Race	149
4	“The Solace of Home”: Paradise	153
4.1	The Search for Home: Race and Religion	155
4.2	The Price of Pure Blackness: The Racial House of Ruby as Exclusive Paradise	161
4.2.1	Fact and Fiction in Paradise	161
4.2.2	Constructing Pure Blackness – Ruby, Okl., population 360	164
4.2.2.1	Creed and Commandment	172
4.2.2.2	Ritual: Religious Myth Re-lived in the Christmas Pageant	178
4.2.2.3	Religious Symbols: The Oven as Shrine	181
4.2.2.4	Sinners	188
4.2.2.5	Heretics and the Discourse on Home	194
4.2.3	Racial Essentialism and Patriarchy	204
4.2.4	The Essentialism of the Race House	210
4.3	The Convent: Race Unmattered in a Heterogeneous Social Space	212
4.3.1	The Convent as a Contact Zone	214
4.3.2	The Role of Religion at the Convent	220
4.3.2.1	Roman Catholicism and the Pauline Dogma	221
4.3.2.2	Loss Unacknowledged and Unmourned	223
4.3.2.3	Spiritual Awakening and Religious Eclecticism	228
4.3.2.4	Religious Rituals at the Convent	239
4.3.2.5	Uninstitutionalized Religion and Women’s Freedom – En- dangered Home	243
4.3.3	Race Within the Convent Community	251
4.3.4	Home as Transitory P/paradise	263

III	Questioning the Notion of Gender	277
5	Stretching the Limits of Gender: Subversive Genders in Oranges Are Not the Only Fruit , Sexing the Cherry , and The Passion	279
5.1	Compulsive Gendering and Dev/fiant Lesbianism	279
5.1.1	Jeanette	280
5.1.2	Villanelle	294
5.1.3	The Dancing Princesses	300
5.2	The Countermyth of Androgyny	304
5.2.1	Villanelle and Henri	305
5.2.2	The Dog-Woman and Jordan	313
5.3	Fragmented Postmodern Subjects and the Unifying Force of Love	326
6	Contesting Gender: Written on the Body	331
6.1	The reluctance of accepting a genderless protagonist	332
6.2	The Politics of Gendering the Narrator	334
6.3	Narrating Genderlessness	339
6.4	Effects of the Narrator's Genderlessness	343
6.4.1	Gender identities and sexualities of former lovers	343
6.4.2	The anarchic force of love	348
6.4.3	Narrative constructions of identity and the body	355
6.4.4	Narrative, romance, and reading	359
	Conclusion: Difference Undone?	361
	Works Cited	375