

Contents

Acknowledgments	vii
Part I. Introduction	1
1 Persons and markets	17
2 Choices in social systems	33
Part II. Cognition and emotion	41
3 The costs of rationality	43
4 Affect, cognition, and well-being in a market economy	58
5 Money and cognitive complexity	79
6 Money symbolism and economic rationality	96
7 Economic and cognitive development in a market society	115
8 Environmental complexity and cognitive complexity	137
Part III. Self-attribution and self-esteem	155
9 Self-attribution: market influences	157
10 Markets and self-esteem	181
Part IV. Human relations	205
11 Friendship and market exchange	207
12 Invidiousness and the friendship or income choice	220
Part V. Work	235
13 Learning at work: beyond human capital	237
14 Degradation of work in the market?	260
15 Distributing workplace learning	289
16 Giving work priority over consumption	314
Part VI. Rewards	337
17 Maximizing pay: costs and consequences	339
18 Hidden costs of rewards and intrinsic satisfaction	364
19 The limits of hidden costs in the market	384
20 Intrinsic values: a balance sheet	397
21 The economics of the intrinsic	413
Part VII. Utility and happiness	423
22 Understanding happiness	427
23 Markets and the satisfaction of human wants	454
24 Pleasure and pain in a market society	478
25 Markets and the structures of happiness	503
26 Buying happiness	524

vi Contents

27	Misinterpreting happiness and satisfaction in a market society	548
28	Summing utilities and happiness	573
Part VIII. Conclusion		591
29	Can the wheel of history turn again?	593