

Preface	9
1 Introducing American True Crime	15
1.1 Definition of True Crime – What Is the Object of this Study?	18
1.2 Research Interest and Structure of the Study	22
1.3 The Origins and Developments of True Crime Narratives in American Literature	27
1.3.1 True Crime Through the Centuries (Seventeenth – Twentieth)..	28
1.3.2 Finding the Contemporary Form of True Crime – Truman Capote's In Cold Blood	35
1.3.3 The Genre Today	38
1.4 Defining the Genre's Form	41
1.4.1 Definitions and Terminology	44
1.4.2 A Short History of Narrative Nonfiction and the New Journalists	49
1.4.3 Conventions and Assumptions of Narrative Nonfiction	57
1.4.4 True Crime as Narrative	64
1.5 True Crime and the American Fascination with Violence	67
1.5.1 A Thumbnail Sketch of Violence in American Culture	68
1.5.2 A Cultural Studies' Take on Violence and the American Character	72
2 How True is True Crime? – Constructions of Authenticity in Narrative Nonfiction Accounts of Real-Life Murder	75
2.1 Setting the Scene – Realism and Late Twentieth-century True Crime Narrative	79
2.1.1 Realism in Contemporary American Literature	79
2.1.2 Postmodern History Writing in Narrative Nonfiction – Establishing a Referential Pact with the Reader	85
2.1.3 Narrating Real-Life Murder – True Crime's Strategies to Construct a True Story of Crime	88
2.1.3.1 Internal Coherence in Accounts of Real-Life Murder	88
2.1.3.2 Authenticating Accounts of Murder Through the Evocation of Particularities of Time and Place	92
2.1.3.3 Murderous Characters – Evoking Particularities of Character	97
2.2 Constructing Authenticity – Journalistic Objectivity in Erik Larson's The Devil in the White City	101

2.2.1	“this is not a work of fiction” – Asserting Authenticity Through Documentation	102
2.2.2	“We ... know more than they did then” – Seeing the Whole Picture in Retrospect	107
2.2.3	Acknowledging Interpretive Efforts	110
2.2.3.1	“to weave a plausible account” – Reconstructing Scenes of Murder	111
2.2.3.2	Characterizing the Historical H. H. Holmes	115
2.2.4	Inferences for Objectivity Claims of True Crime Literature	120
2.3	The Truth in Subjectivity – Gaining the Reader’s Trust Through Personal Authenticity	121
2.3.1	Admitting Perspective – Point of View and the Construction of Knowledge in James Ellroy’s My Dark Places	124
2.3.1.1	“The Boy in the Picture” – First- and Third-Person Narrative and the Use of Perspective	125
2.3.1.2	“I went insane once” – Presenting an Unreliable Narrator	129
2.3.1.3	“She wasn’t abstracted” – Verifying the Facts	132
2.3.2	Jeopardizing the Reader’s Trust Through Violation of Contract – The Role of the Reporter in John Berendt’s Midnight in the Garden of Good and Evil	137
2.3.2.1	Establishing an Author-Reader Contract – The Narrator as an Authenticator	138
2.3.2.2	Violating Contract – The Narrator as a Narrative Device	143
2.3.2.3	The Significance of the Referential Pact to a Nonfictional Reading of True Crime	147
2.3.3	“I know this story well” – Authenticity Through First-hand Experience in Mikal Gilmore’s True Crime Memoir Shot in the Heart	148
2.3.3.1	True Crime as an Autobiographical Story – Gaining Knowledge Through Personal Experience	150
2.3.3.2	Unreliable Memory – Favoring Emotional Sincerity over Factual Accuracy	154
2.3.3.3	Denying Closure – The Ambiguity of Unanswered Questions	158
2.4	Concluding Remarks	161
3	Narrating Violent Crime in America – The Cultural Significance of Contemporary True Crime Writing	165

3.1	Making It About America – True Crime’s Use of National Myths to Facilitate Identification	168
3.1.1	Ron Powers’s Tom and Huck Don’t Live Here Anymore and the Loss of Innocence in America’s Heartland.....	168
3.1.1.1	Finding out Where Tom and Huck Have Gone – The Demythification of American Boyhood	169
3.1.1.2	Cancerous Values – The American National Identity Turned Violent.....	177
3.1.1.3	Assault on the Myth of the Hearth – Evoking Fear by Situating Violence in Our Own Backyard	187
3.1.2	Evoking the Myth of a Violent Culture in Jon Krakauer’s Under the Banner of Heaven – The Significance of Emotional Identification	199
3.1.2.1	Appealing to the American Identity – The Myth of a Violent Home-bred Religion	200
3.1.2.2	Outlaws Within Our Own Borders? The Extreme of Religious Fanaticism and Problems of Identification.....	206
3.1.3	The Violent Criminal as an Other – True Crime’s Need for an Emotional Connection with the Reader	214
3.2	True Crime as a Mirror of American Society – Ann Rule’s The Stranger Beside Me	219
3.2.1	True Crime as a Reflection of Crime Patterns in the Twentieth Century.....	221
3.2.1.1	A New Type of Murder	223
3.2.1.2	The Faceless Threat to Society	230
3.2.2	Human or Monster? Presenting Characters the Reader Can Relate to in Accounts of Serial Murder	234
3.2.2.1	Finding Psychological Explanations	236
3.2.2.2	Depicting the Ordinarity of the Serial Killer	240
3.2.2.3	Aiding Identification through Empathy.....	244
3.2.3	Reading True Crime as a True Story About Ourselves	248
3.2.3.1	True Crime as a Survival Guide: Learning Life Lessons from The Stranger Beside Me	249
3.2.3.2	Denying Closure, Denying Safety	258
3.3	Concluding Remarks	260
	Epilog: The True Crime Reading Experience	263
	Works Cited	271