

CONTENTS

*List of illustrations [ix] Preface [xiii] Acknowledgments [xxv]
Abbreviations [xxix]*

CHAPTER 1 Introduction: Ethnography and the Colonial State [1]

Three Colonies, 3 • Making Sense of Colonial Variations, 19 • The Specificity of the Colonial State, 27 • Precolonial Mimicry and the Centrality of Native Policy, 41 • Toward an Explanation: The Colonial State as a Social Field, 45 • Symbolic and Imaginary Identifications, 55 • Resistance, Cooperation, and Inflections of Native Policy by Its Addressees, 66 • Imperial Germany and the German Empire, 68

PART ONE: SOUTHWEST AFRICA

CHAPTER 2 “A World Composed almost Entirely of Contradictions”: Southwest Africans in German Eyes, before Colonialism [75]

Precolonial and Protocolonial Imagery of Southwest Africans, 77 • The Khoi-khoi: The Path to Precolonial Mimicry, 79 • The Rehoboth Basters: Pure Intermediacy, 121 • The Ovaherero: A Radically Simplified Ethnographic Discourse, 124 • Toward Colonialism, 133

CHAPTER 3 From Native Policy to Genocide to Eugenics: German Southwest Africa [135]

Accessing the Inaccessible, 135 • The Germans and the Witbooi People, 146 • “Rivers of Blood and Rivers of Money”: Germans and Ovaherero, 179 • Collaboration and the Rule of Difference: The Rehoboth Basters under German Rule, 216 • Conclusion, 239

PART TWO: SAMOA

CHAPTER 4 “A Foreign Race That All Travelers Have Agreed to be the Most Engaging”: The Creation of the Samoan Noble Savage, by Way of Tahiti [243]

The Idea of Polynesian Noble Savagery, 243 • Europeans on Polynesia in the Wake of Wallis and Bougainville: The Tahitian Metonym, 247 • Polynesia and Tahiti in German Eyes, 1770s–1850, 261 • Nineteenth-Century Social Change in Polynesia and the Increasing Attractiveness of Samoa, 280 • Nineteenth-Century Samoa: From Lapérouse to the Germans, 288 • The Evolution of European and German Representations of Samoa, 298 • Precolonial Guidelines for a Future Native Policy, 307

CHAPTER 5 “The Spirit of the German Nation at Work in the Antipodes”: German Colonialism in Samoa, 1900–1914 [317]

Salvage Colonialism, 317 • The Sources of Native Policy in Samoa, 341 • Class Distinction and Class Exaltation, 350 • Conclusion: Resistance and the Limits on Colonial Native Policy, 355

PART THREE: CHINA

CHAPTER 6 The Foreign Devil’s Handwriting: German Views of China before “Kiautschou” [361]

Europe’s Cathay, 365 • Sinomania, 367 • German Views of China in the Era of Sinomania, 376 • The Rise of Sinophobia, 384 • German Sinophobia, 400 • En Route to Qingdao: Speaking of the Devil, 403 • Multivocality in German Representations of China at the End of the Nineteenth Century, 421 • Toward “German-China”, 426 • Transition, 429

CHAPTER 7 A Pact with the (Foreign) Devil: Qingdao as a Colony [433]

Bumrush the Show: Germans in Colonial Kiaochow, 1897–1904, 433 • Shaken, Not Stirred: Segregated Colonial Space and Radical Alterity during the First Phase of German Colonialism in Kiaochow, 1897–1904, 446 • German Native Policy in Kiaochow, Compared, 458 • Early Native Policy and the Haunting of Sinophobia by Sinophilia, 461 • The Seminar for Oriental Languages and German Sinology as a Conduit for Sinophilia, 467 • Rapprochement: The Second Phase of German Colonialism in Kiaochow, 1905–14, 470 • Explaining the Shift in Native Policy, 490 • Conclusion, 506

CHAPTER 8 Conclusion: Colonial Afterlives [509]

Appendix 1: A Note on Sources and Procedures [519]

Appendix 2: Head Administrators of German Southwest Africa, Samoa, and Kiaochow [525]

Bibliography [527] Index [605]