

Contents

Editor's Foreword	ix
Preface	xi

Introduction

- |  |   |
|--|---|
| 1. Myths and anachronisms: the need for a new look at Roman publishing | 3 |
|--|---|

What was the Roman book?

- |   |    |
|---|----|
| 2. Format wars: scroll v. codex, papyrus v. parchment, pagan v. Christian | 15 |
| 3. Don't mess up the aesthetics: marching columns and rivers of letters   | 35 |
| 4. Did the medium shape the message? Deciphering the author's intent      | 45 |

Deconstructing the Roman book trade

- |   |    |
|---|----|
| 5. Atticus and Co. – Roman publishers?                                | 53 |
| 6. Bookshops and copyshops: a trip to Rome's Argiletum and Sigillaria | 57 |
| 7. Books for looks: the library shelves as imperial patronage         | 67 |

What the Latin tells us

- |   |    |
|---|----|
| 8. Slavery as the enabling infrastructure of Roman literature   | 79 |
| 9. Getting into circulation: from private space to public space | 86 |

Texts in an oral/aural society

- |   |     |
|---|-----|
| 10. Effecte! Graviter! Cito! Nequitur! Euge! Beate! : the recitatio as act of publication | 95  |
| 11. Literature of the voice: 'toss me a coin and I'll tell you a golden story'                          | 111 |

Contents

The perils of publishing

- |   |     |
|---|-----|
| 12. The battle for survival: mice and worms, plagiarism and posterity | 129 |
| 13. Bookburning and treason: 'a time of savagery even in peace'       | 135 |

Gluing it all together

- |   |     |
|---|-----|
| 14. Scripts for all classes: the theatre of Rome, Rome as theatre         | 147 |
| 15. A unitary culture: elite self-definition and Romanitas for all | 162 |

- |   |     |
|---|-----|
| Appendix A. Roman shorthand: a note on Tiro             | 175 |
| Appendix B. Poetic postures: toto notus in orbe? | 178 |
| Notes   | 181 |
| Bibliography  | 223 |
| Index   | 230 |