

Contents

Acknowledgments	vii
Abbreviations	ix
Chronology	xi
1. Introduction	1
1.1. The monopoly of pluralism	5
1.2. Tolerance, moderation, forbearance and acceptance	6
2. Articulating Forbearance and Compulsion before 250	9
2.1. The limits of Greek and Roman forbearance	9
2.2. Kalokagathia and the Jews in the Roman world	14
2.3. The Christians and libertas religionis	19
2.4. Being a good Roman: loyalty and non-conformity	25
3. The Third Century	28
3.1. Towards the religious unity of the empire	28
3.2. Lobbying against Christians	38
3.3. Christian writers on forbearance	46
4. From Constantine to Constantius II	56
4.1. Religious liberty and concord: Licinius and Constantine	56
4.2. Imperial rhetoric: Constantine's sons	64
4.3. From persecuted to prophets of persecution	66
4.4. Moderate voices	73
5. From Julian to Valentinian I	75
5.1. Changing tides	75
5.2. Reactions to changing tides	81
6. From Gratian to Theodosius I	88
6.1. Gratian, Valentinian II and Theodosius I: striving for religious unity	88
6.2. Libanius and Symmachus: the eloquent appeals	92
6.3. The refutation of plurality	99

Contents

7. After Theodosius I	100
7.1. Honorius, Arcadius and Theodosius II: towards unity	106
7.2. The authorization of oppression and compulsion	108
7.3. Augustine and religious compulsion	111
7.4. The debate between non-conformists and lobbyists	125
8. Towards a World of One Alternative	134
Notes	141
Ancient sources	219
Modern bibliography	225
Index of sources	243
General index	251